JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

The District Court had jurisdiction over this action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331, because it arises under the United States Constitution, and pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1343, because relief is sought under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The District Court granted a motion to dismiss, which is a final order and judgment disposing of all of plaintiffs' claims, on August 28, 2020 (Dkt. 30 & 31). Plaintiffs filed a timely notice to appeal on September 28, 2020 (Dkt. 32). This Court has jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a)(1).

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES

1. May the State of Rhode Island compel speakers to disclose their identity on pure speech run near in time to an election?
2. May the State of Rhode Island compel private, nonprofit social-welfare organizations to disclose their general-fund donors because they sponsor non-electoral advocacy communications run near in time to an election?
3. May the State of Rhode Island compel speakers to speak the names of their financial supporters within pure speech run near in time to an election?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Rhode Island imposes burdensome regulations on issue advocacy run near in time to an election.

Rhode Island law defines an electioneering communication as “any print, broadcast, cable, satellite, or electronic media communication . . . that unambiguously identifies a candidate or referendum and is made either within sixty (60) days before a general or special election or town meeting for the office sought by the candidate or referendum; or thirty (30) days before a primary election, for the office sought by the candidate; and is targeted to the relevant electorate.” R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25-3(16).

If any person or organization spends at least $1,000 on electioneering communications in a calendar year, it becomes an independent-expenditure entity subject to a number of regulatory requirements enforced by the Defendants. R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-1(b). Three are relevant to this case. Count I: the entity must file with the Defendants reports disclosing the identity of all donors to the organization’s general fund who gave $1,000 or more if the general fund was used to pay for the ad. R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-3(h). Count II: the entity must register with the Defendants and report the name and address of the entity, R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-1(f), and include on the communication a disclaimer identifying the entity’s sponsorship, R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-3(a) & (c). Count III: the entity must include on all electioneering communications a list of its top-five donors during the one-year period preceding the communication. R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-3(a). The information must be displayed or spoken in all television, mail, radio, or internet advertising. Id. If anyone fails to comply with these laws, they are subject to civil penalties and potentially criminal prosecution. R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-4(a)-(b).

B. Applicants are nonprofit social-welfare organizations seeking to engage in issue advocacy when voters are paying attention.

Plaintiffs are nonprofit social-welfare organizations that wished to exercise their First Amendment rights to speak about public issues in the months leading up to the election this November.² The Gaspee Project is a Rhode Island-based organization that “engages in issue advocacy communications around its mission to return government to the people.” Amended Compl. ¶ 26. The Illinois Opportunity Project is a Chicago-based organization that “engages in issue advocacy in states across the country on issues that relate to its mission, which is to promote the social welfare and common good by supporting policies founded on the principles of liberty and free enterprise.” Id. at ¶ 27.

Both groups planned to spend more than $1,000 on issue advocacy materials mailed to Rhode Island voters in the weeks before the fall 2020 election. Gaspee intended to mail information to voters about the effect of referenda proposals on local taxes. Id. at ¶ 28. IOP planned to inform voters “about how their legislators voted on a bill expanding the power of government unions (2019 Senate Bill 712).” Id. at ¶ 29. Both Plaintiffs “have received donations over $1,000 in the past and intend to solicit and accept donations over $1,000 in the future.” Id. at ¶ 31.

Because of these facts, both Plaintiffs would be required to fully comply with Rhode Island’s independent-expenditure statute, including reporting their donors to the Defendants (count I), registering their organizations with the Defendants and disclosing their sponsorship on their messages (count II), and naming their donors in their messages (count III). This they do not wish to do, and so have chilled their speech and brought this pre-enforcement challenge. Id. at ¶¶ 37-38.

² Though the November 2020 election has come and gone, this case is not moot because Plaintiffs are institutional, repeat players in elections. See Amended Compl. ¶ 30. Thus, they qualify for the “capable of repetition, yet evading review” exception frequently applied to litigants in election-related cases. See, e.g., Becker v. FEC, 230 F.3d 381, 389 (1st Cir. 2000); id. at 404 n.23 (Torruella, C.J., concurring).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

A recent national poll found that 42 percent of Democrats would support firing a business executive from her job if it became known that she had privately donated to Donald Trump’s campaign for president. Similarly, 26 percent of Republicans said they would support firing a Biden donor. Small wonder, then, that fully one-third of respondents overall were worried about losing their job if their political opinions became public. Emily Ekins, “Poll: 62% of Americans Say They Have Political Views They’re Afraid to Share,” CATO Institute (July 22, 2020).³

This case is brought for that third of Americans fearful that the cost of supporting ideas they believe in is the loss of their job. This is, in fact, “the purpose behind the Bill of Rights, and of the First Amendment in particular: to protect unpopular individuals from retaliation -- and their ideas from suppression -- at the hand of an intolerant society.” Powell v. Alexander, 391 F.3d 1, 16 (1st Cir. 2004) (quoting McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Comm’n, 514 U.S. 334, 337 (1995)).

The State of Rhode Island, however, has enacted a statute which coerces private, nonprofit, social-welfare organizations into disclosing their financial information as the price for access to the public square. This law puts these organizations and their donors at risk and fundamentally fails to respect the First Amendment’s guarantees.

³ Available at <https://www.cato.org/publications/survey-reports/poll-62-americans-say-they-have-political-views-theyre-afraid-share>.

“The first amendment lies at the heart of our most cherished and protected freedoms. Among those freedoms is the right to engage in issue-oriented political speech.” Faucher v. Fed. Election Com., 928 F.2d 468, 472 (1st Cir. 1991). This right to speak about issues and politics is burdened when Rhode Island (1) forces speakers to forgo their right to anonymous speech (McIntyre v. Ohio Election Commission), (2) compels them to disclose their donors (NAACP v. Alabama); and (3) compels them to speak messages that they don’t want to say (National Institute of Family & Life Advocates v. Becerra). Because the State lacks a sufficient interest to overcome the burden these laws impose, the statute is unconstitutional and the District Court erred in granting the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

ARGUMENT

At the 12(b)(6) stage, all the plaintiff must do in the complaint is “frame a viable constitutional claim.” Morales-Tanon v. P.R. Elec. Power Auth., 524 F.3d 15, 18 (1st Cir. 2008); accord Banco Cooperativo de P.R. v. Herrera (In re Herrera), 589 B.R. 444, 451-52 (B.A.P. 1st Cir. 2018) (“A Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal may be based on either a ‘lack of a cognizable legal theory’ or ‘the absence of sufficient facts alleged under a cognizable legal theory.’”). As will be demonstrated in this brief, Plaintiffs have alleged three clear legal theories grounded in applicable U.S. Supreme Court precedent; all are sufficiently viable to survive Rule 12(b)(6).

The Court should also bear in mind this circuit’s guideposts for cases on political speech: “[A]ny law that burdens the rights of individuals to come together for political purposes is suspect and must be viewed warily” and “measures which hinder group efforts to make independent expenditures in support of candidates or ballot initiatives are particularly vulnerable to constitutional attack.” Vote Choice v. DiStefano, 4 F.3d 26, 34 (1st Cir. 1993).

I. Rhode Island’s statute violates Plaintiffs’ First Amendment right to speaker privacy.

When the City of Cambridge (Massachusetts) passed an ordinance requiring persons who wish to distribute literature on the streets of the city to first register and wear a badge, volunteers for a political party promptly sued. Even though the distributors were political activists, this Court never the less upheld their right to distribute their party’s literature anonymously, reasoning: “printed materials distributed anonymously ‘have played an important role in the progress of mankind.”’ Wulp v. Corcoran, 454 F.2d 826, 834 (1st Cir. 1972) (quoting Talley v. California, 362 U.S. 60, 64 (1960)). This Court further recognized “the consequent fear of reprisals that such identification may well entail” if the activists were forced to disclose their identities to authorities or the recipients of their messages. Id.

This Court’s approach in Wulp was validated by the U.S. Supreme Court several decades later in McIntyre. There, Ms. McIntyre was upset that her school district was planning to raise her taxes at an upcoming referendum. So she did that most American of things — she showed up at a meeting with a bunch of fliers in hand to convince her neighbors to join her cause. McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 337. To the horror of Ohio’s Elections Commission, she did not first file paperwork, create a committee, secure a treasurer, open a separate bank account, disclose her donors, and then put all that information on her fliers. For this flagrant violation of Ohio’s campaign-finance statutes she was censured, condemned, and ordered to pay a fine. Id. at 338. She took her cause all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, arguing that if the right to anonymous speech was good for the founding fathers debating the Constitution, it was good for her too.

The Supreme Court agreed, saying “[n]o form of speech is entitled to greater constitutional protection than Mrs. McIntyre’s.” Id. at 347. The Court honored the nation’s long heritage of anonymous speech in the public square. Id. at 342; id. at 359-70 (Thomas, J., concurring); accord Jonathan Turley, Registering Publius: The Supreme Court and the Right to Anonymity, 2002 CATO SUPREME COURT REVIEW 57, 58-61 (recounting founding era history).

The Supreme Court reaffirmed McIntyre in Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of N.Y., Inc. v. Village of Stratton, 536 U.S. 150, 166 (2002), and the Fourth Circuit used it to decide an important free-speech case in December. Wash. Post v. McManus, 944 F.3d 506, 515 (4th Cir. 2019); accord Norris v. Cape Elizabeth Sch. Dist., 969 F.3d 12, 24 (1st Cir. 2020) (describing the holding of McIntyre: “anonymous speech is constitutionally protected”); United States v. Moloney (In re Price), 685 F.3d 1, 20 (1st Cir. 2012) (Torruella, J., concurring) (“It is . . . well-settled that the First Amendment’s protections will at times shield ‘information gatherers and disseminators,’ from others’ attempts to reveal their identities,” citing McIntyre).

The Plaintiffs here are looking to do much the same thing as Mrs. McIntyre.⁴ The Gaspee Project wishes to provide voters with taxation information as they think about whether they want to vote to raise their taxes at referendum. Compl., Dkt. 1, ¶ 28. In fact, Gaspee’s advocacy differs from Mrs. McIntyre’s in only immaterial two respects: it will mail the information rather than distribute it by hand, and it will not encourage people to vote for or against the referenda it references. Illinois Opportunity Project wishes to mail information about how incumbent legislators voted on a particular bill rather than information on referenda, but it too will not encourage recipients to vote one way or the other on those incumbents. Compl. ¶ 29. The fact that the speech is undertaken by a group rather than an individual is of no constitutional consequence. ACLU of Nev. v. Heller, 378 F.3d 979, 989-90 (9th Cir. 2004).

Below, the District Court decided that the disclaimer laws are constitutional because Citizens United abolished any line between “issue advocacy” and “express advocacy.” Addendum at 7. While that is a dubious proposition,⁵ it is an irrelevant one here. Ms. McIntyre was engaged in express advocacy regarding an election, and instead, “The decision in favor of anonymity may be motivated by fear of economic or official retaliation, by concern about social ostracism, or merely by a desire to preserve as much of one’s privacy as possible.” McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 341-42. Nevertheless, this court may well wonder why these two plaintiffs, both of which are established institutions, desire their privacy.

The best answer is James Madison’s: “we must consider the possibility that anonymity promotes a focus on the strength of the argument rather than the identity of the speaker; this is a reason why Madison, Hamilton, and Jay chose to publish The Federalist anonymously. Instead of having to persuade New Yorkers that his roots in Virginia should be overlooked, Madison could present the arguments and let the reader evaluate them on merit.” Majors v. Abell, 361 F.3d 349, 357 (7th Cir. 2004) (Easterbrook, J., dubitante).

⁵ See McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 206 n.88 (2003); FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 470 (2007) (Roberts, C.J., plurality).

the volunteers in Wulp were distributing literature advocating their political party. Yet both of them were entitled to anonymity.

Moreover, Ms. McIntyre engaged in her anonymous express advocacy close in time to an election, as in the window covered by the independent-expenditure statute McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 337 (before an “imminent” election). In the Court’s words: “That this advocacy occurred in the heat of a controversial referendum vote only strengthens the protection afforded to Mrs. McIntyre’s expression: Urgent, important, and effective speech can be no less protected than impotent speech, lest the right to speak be relegated to those instances when it is least needed.” Id. at 347; accord Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 334 (2010) (“It is well known that the public begins to concentrate on elections only in the weeks immediately before they are held. There are short timeframes in which speech can have influence.”); Wash. State Republican Party v. Wash. State Pub. Disclosure Comm’n, 4 P.3d 808, 821 (Wash. 2000).

The District Court also distinguished McIntyre because the Ohio law flatly outlawed anonymous campaign literature, whereas this law only “requires certain disclosures from organizations that meet specific contribution thresholds.” Addendum at 17. Rhode Island’s statute has the effect of prohibiting anonymous literature when the circulator spends at least $1,000. If the circulator spends more than $1,000 on the literature and fails to include the required identifier, the circulator commits a violation punishable by a civil penalty. 17 R.I. Gen. Laws 25.3-4 (b). Knowing and willful violations are a criminal misdemeanor. Id. at (a). Thus, Rhode Island's statute has the practical effect of outlawing anonymous literature if the circulator spends at least $1,000 in a calendar year producing such literature.

The $1,000 threshold does not distinguish McIntyre for two reasons. First, nothing in the opinion's text or logic says that the size of the advocacy matters to the level of protection it receives. The opinion never provides an amount associated with Ms. McIntyre's advocacy, though we know she "paid a professional printer to make additional copies." 514 U.S. at 337. Rather, the Court simply tells us that anonymous speech "exemplifies the purpose behind the Bill of Rights, and of the First Amendment in particular: to protect unpopular individuals from retaliation -- and their ideas from suppression -- at the hand of an intolerant society." Id. at 357. That holding does not dissipate beyond a certain dollar limit: anonymous speech protects both 20 black-and-white copies of a controversial circular printed on one's home ink-jet and 2,000 color copies of the same message printed at OfficeMax. If anything, the rationale in the majority opinion and Justice Thomas's concurrence both embrace commercial printing or publishing of anonymous books and newspapers, which obviously require a substantial monetary investment to produce. Id. at 341, n.4.; id. at 359-67 (Thomas, J., concurring). This fits the conclusion of the 9th Circuit, which decided that nothing in McIntyre limited its application to the lone citizen rather than a group acting on a broader scale, such as the ACLU of Nevada. ACLU of Nev., 378 F.3d at 989-91.

Second, Justice Ginsburg wrote a concurrence suggesting exactly what the District Court argues here, that McIntyre only applies to "an individual leafleteer who, within her local community, spoke her mind, but sometimes not her name. We do not thereby hold that the State may not in other, larger circumstances require the speaker to disclose its interest by disclosing its identity.” Id. at 358 (Ginsburg, J., concurring). But this concurrence was written by Justice Ginsburg alone; five other justices joined the majority in full without feeling the need to adopt Justice Ginsburg’s qualification concerning “larger circumstances.” Taken independently or together, these two observations from McIntyre disprove the District Court’s distinguishing rationale.

The District Court further minimized McIntyre by suggesting it is simply dated, even implicitly overruled by Citizens United, which “upheld the federal disclaimer provision without so much as mentioning McIntyre.” Addendum at 17 (quoting Vt. Right to Life Comm., Inc. v. Sorrell, 875 F. Supp. 2d 376, 399 (D. Vt. 2012), aff’d, 758 F.3d 118 (2d Cir. 2014)). This would be news to the Supreme Court; just five months after the issuance of Citizens United, McIntyre’s majority was cited approvingly in three separate opinions in Doe v. Reed. 561 U.S. 186, 213 (2010) (Sotomayor, J., concurring) (using McIntyre to distinguish regulations on pure speech like disclaimer requirements from non-speech regulations on the electoral process); id. at 218 (Stevens, J., concurring) (“From time to time throughout history, persecuted groups have been able to criticize oppressive practices and laws either anonymously or not at all.”); id. at 238-39 (Thomas, J., dissenting) (discussing the informational interest in McIntyre). All of which is to say McIntyre remains good law after Citizens United, and the District Court erred in tossing it aside.

Only a few years ago, a citizen of Rhode Island “distributed anonymous written materials expressing his views on issues of social and political concern.” Blakeslee v. St. Sauveur, 51 F. Supp. 3d 210, 211 (D.R.I. 2014). A nearby Rhode Island statute prohibited mailing or otherwise distributing any material “designed or tending to injure or defeat any candidate for nomination or election to any public office, by criticizing the candidate’s personal character or political action” unless it contained “in a conspicuous place the name of the author and either the names of the chairperson and secretary, or of two (2) officers, of the political or other organization issuing the poster, flier, or circular . . .” Id. (quoting R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-23-2.). The Attorney General of Rhode Island in that case conceded that the statute was unconstitutional under McIntyre, and the district court granted summary judgment to the plaintiff. Id. at 212. That is also the right outcome here.

II. Rhode Island’s statute violates Plaintiffs’ First Amendment right to organizational privacy.

When asked whether a gated community could insist that a leafleteer disclose his or her identity at a guard house, this Circuit reasoned that “giving a guard a name and identification is a narrower and less threatening imposition on privacy than requiring one to register for a permit, to wear an identification badge in distributing literature, or to disclose membership information.” Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc’y of N.Y., Inc v. Jesus, 634 F.3d 3, 14 (1st Cir. 2011) (emphasis added). And even then, the court continued, “the safer course would be to ask for names and identification only where cause exists,” such as “a reasonable suspicion (based on objective circumstances) that a non-resident visitor may engage in criminal activity . . .” Id.

This statute not only requires Plaintiffs to register for a permit before speaking in the public square, and to put identification on their literature (as explained above), it also requires them to disclose their membership information. See, e.g., R.I. Gen. Laws. § 17-25.3-3(a). This is equally unconstitutional.

It is unconstitutional because, “[i]n a line of cases beginning with NAACP v. Alabama, 357 U.S. 449 . . . (1958), the Supreme Court has held that compelling a private organization to reveal the identities of its members where such disclosure will result in the harassment of existing members and the discouragement of new members can constitute a violation of the right to freedom of association.” United States v. Comley, 890 F.2d 539, 543 (1st Cir. 1989). See Correa-Martinez v. Arrillaga-Belendez, 903 F.2d 49, 57 (1st Cir. 1990) (quoting in part from NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 429-30 (1963)).

The NAACP of the 1950s was without a doubt an issue-advocacy organization. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had been founded decades earlier, in New York, as a nonprofit organization dedicated to supporting the success of African-Americans. In the era of Jim Crow, it sponsored rallies, organized demonstrations, and talked a lot about issues, frequently mentioning elected officials by name. See Gilbert Jonas, FREEDOM’S SWORD: THE NAACP AND THE STRUGGLE AGAINST RACISM IN AMERICA, 1906-1969, 169-230 (Routledge 2005); Patricia Sullivan, LIFT EVERY VOICE: THE NAACP AND THE MAKING OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS MOVEMENT, 385-428 (New Press 2009).

The NAACP's issue advocacy did not sit well with the entrenched interests in state capitals across the South. So using several different tools and tactics, government officials tried to get access to the NAACP's membership list, anxious to know who had the temerity to contribute money to the group that was making their lives so miserable. The Supreme Court put its foot down and stopped the State of Alabama's ham-handed effort to get the list. NAACP v. Ala. ex rel. Patterson, 357 U.S. 449 (1958); accord Bates v. City of Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516 (1960); Gibson v. Fla. Legislative Investigation Comm., 372 U.S. 539, 539 (1963). The Court held that the freedom-of-association embedded in the First Amendment included a right to private association. Id. at 466. And this right is especially important for groups that take controversial stands on issues in the public square which may engender backlash, the Court said. Id. at 460.

In the original NAACP case, the Court confronted the question how to square its holding with a prior case, Zimmerman, where it had held that the State of New York could compel the Ku Klux Klan to turn over its membership list. Only the Klan's violent criminality was a sufficiently compelling state interest to override that organization's right to private association, the Court reasoned. Id. at 465 (discussing New York ex rel. Bryant v. Zimmerman, 278 U.S. 63 (1928)). The Court returned to this criminality standard in its Red Scare cases, Uphaus v. Wyman, 360 U.S. 72, 80 (1959), and Barenblatt v. United States, 360 U.S. 109, 128 (1959). Later circuit court decisions follow this same pattern, Dole v. Service Employees Union, 950 F.2d 1456, 1461 (9th Cir. 1991); Trade Waste Mgmt. Ass'n v. Hughey, 780 F.2d 221, 238 (3d Cir.

1985), or recognize it explicitly, Familias Unidas v. Briscoe, 619 F.2d 391, 401 (5th Cir. 1980).

The District Court dismissed the NAACP case in this matter, reading that decision as only covering those organizations that could prove, on an as-applied basis, that they would be subject to substantial levels of harassment and retaliation. Addendum at 19. This, however, fails to read the entire line of cases stemming from NAACP. In later cases, the Supreme Court clarified that though the NAACP had a legitimate fear of harassment, it was not the NAACP's burden to prove the likelihood of harassment; rather it was the government's burden to prove the necessity of its access to private information. Baird v. State Bar of Ariz., 401 U.S. 1, 6-7 (1971) (“When a State seeks to inquire about an individual’s beliefs and associations a heavy burden lies upon it to show that the inquiry is necessary to protect a legitimate state interest.”); Cal. Bankers Ass’n v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 55 (1974). In a free society, citizens’ privacy is the presumption, and the burden is on the government to show its need — not on the citizens to show likely victimization if their names are exposed. Shelton v. Tucker, 364 U.S. 479, 487-88 (1960). See McCutcheon v. FEC, 572 U.S. 185, 210 (2014) (“When the Government restricts speech, the Government bears the burden of proving the constitutionality of its actions.”). All organizations, popular and unpopular, are entitled to their privacy from government’s prying eyes. Gibson, 372 U.S. at 555-56 (“all legitimate organizations are the beneficiaries of these protections”); id. at 569-70 (Douglas, J., concurring) (“Unpopular groups (NAACP v. Alabama, supra) like popular ones are protected. . . .[W]hether a group is popular or unpopular, the right of privacy implicit in the First Amendment creates an area into which the Government may not enter.”); Britt v. Superior Court, 20 Cal. 3d 844, 854, 574 P.2d 766, 772 (1978); Paralyzed Veterans of Am. v. McPherson, No. C 06-4670 SBA (JL), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64813, at *15 n.5 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 22, 2007) (“the non-offensiveness of an advocacy group does not diminish the degree of First Amendment protection it deserves.”).

Again, the Plaintiffs stand in the same stead as the NAACP. They are legitimate, legal, nonprofit organizations that wish to speak out on issues. They are private associations of members and supporters who pool their resources to talk about the issues that are important to them and their communities, just like the NAACP. They are not campaign committees or political parties. Their membership lists should receive the same protection as the NAACP.

III. The right not to be compelled to speak protects plaintiffs.

The First Amendment protects “both the right to speak freely and the right to refrain from speaking at all.” Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 714 (1977). Compelled speech happens when “an individual is obliged personally to express a message he disagrees with, imposed by the government.” Johanns v. Livestock Mktg. Ass’n, 544 U.S. 550, 557 (2005). When the government compels speech, “an individual must personally speak the government’s message,” which often times means “the complaining speaker’s own message was affected by the speech it was forced to accommodate.” Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. & Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 63 (2006). “[T]he Supreme Court has long treated compelled speech as abhorrent to the First Amendment.” Clifton v. FEC, 114 F.3d 1309, 1313 (1st Cir. 1997).

“Laws that compel speakers to utter or distribute speech bearing a particular message are subject to the same rigorous scrutiny [as other content-based laws].” Turner Broad. Sys., Inc. v. F.C.C., 512 U.S. 622, 642 (1994). Such content-based regulations of speech “are presumptively unconstitutional and may be justified only if the government proves that they are narrowly tailored to serve compelling state interests,” Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 135 S. Ct. 2218, 2226 (2015), i.e., strict scrutiny. Id. at 2233 (Alito, J., concurring); accord Pharm. Care Mgmt. Ass’n v. Rowe, 429 F.3d 294, 309 (1st Cir. 2005) (“In such a case, the state, to justify its law, would have to advance a compelling state interest and also show that the means chosen to accomplish that interest are narrowly tailored.”).

The U.S. Supreme Court’s recent decision in NIFLA is directly on point to the Plaintiffs’ situation. Nat’l Inst. of Family & Life Advocates v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361 (2018). There, the Court considered a California statute which compelled clinics licensed to serve pregnant women to post a notice about the women’s abortion rights. Unlicensed clinics were required to post a notice that they were not licensed to provide medical services. NIFLA, a trade association for pro-life crisis pregnancy centers, sued to stop the compelled speech. Id. at 2368. The Court quickly concluded the required notices were compelled speech: “licensed clinics must provide a government-drafted script about the availability of state-sponsored services, as well as contact information for how to obtain them. One of those services is abortion — the very practice that petitioners are devoted to opposing.” Id. at 2371. Because the law changes the content of the clinics’ speech, forcing them to post notices with statements they deeply oppose, the Court subjected the law to strict scrutiny. Id.

Compare California’s notice statute to Rhode Island’s requirement that Plaintiffs list their sponsorship and their top donors on the face of their advocacy messages. The requirement is a “government drafted script” about the sponsoring organization and donors behind the advertisement, whose exact wording is set out in statute. R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-3. Plaintiffs are compelled to alter their speech to incorporate the government’s message just like the pregnancy centers were forced to alter their speech to incorporate the government’s notice. Plaintiffs obviously are organizations that believe strongly in the right to privacy for citizens and would not include this information otherwise. See Acevedo-Delgado v. Rivera, 292 F.3d 37, 44 n.9 (1st Cir. 2002) (“strong opposition to an ideological cause heightens the burden imposed by compelling speech.”). If anything, Plaintiffs’ case is stronger because they are being forced to alter their own pure speech, while NIFLA’s members were only required to post a government-provided, government-branded notice.

The District Court distinguished NIFLA by saying that the California law compelled the crisis pregnancy centers to speak a particular ideological message, whereas the Rhode Island law compels the Plaintiffs to speak a content-neutral, non-ideological message. Addendum at 21.

This makes two mistakes. First, the District Court misunderstands the Supreme Court’s holdings on compelled speech. The Rhode Island statute is content-based not because it compels the speaker to communicate a particular content, but because the regulation is triggered based on the content of the Plaintiffs' speech. "Government regulation of speech is content based if a law applies to particular speech because of the topic discussed or the idea or message expressed." Reed, 576 U.S. at 163. Rhode Island's independent-expenditure statute is obviously content-based: it only applies because of the topic discussed, namely because a message mentions a candidate for public office close in time to an election. R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-1(e). "Some facial distinctions based on a message are obvious, defining regulated speech by particular subject matter, and others are more subtle, defining regulated speech by its function or purpose. Reed, 576 U.S. at 163. Rhode Island's law makes just such a facial distinction, defining the class of regulated speech based on its particular subject matter (again, messages which mention a candidate for office).

Admittedly, in this sense all of Rhode Island's independent-expenditure statute is content-based and should be subject to strict scrutiny, including the disclaimer and disclosure provisions along with the compelled-speech provision. However, prior precedent from the Supreme Court and this Court have used exacting scrutiny when analyzing disclosure provisions. Nat'l Org. for Marriage v. McKee, 649 F.3d 34, 55 (1st Cir. 2011). That may well be wrong, at least as to media-based independent expenditures, for the reasons discussed above and because these are non-electoral organizations. See Ams. for Prosperity Found. v. Becerra, 919 F.3d 1177, 1179 (9th Cir. 2019) (Ikuta, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc); Calzone v. Summers, 2019 U.S. App. LEXIS 32776, *18-21 (8th Cir. Nov. 1, 2019) (Grasz, J., concurring). And it isn't entirely clear that there is a difference in the Supreme Court's mind between exacting and strict scrutiny. See, e.g., Williams-Yulee v. Fla. Bar, 135 S. Ct. 1656, 1664 (2015) (using the terms interchangeably). But those are primarily arguments for en banc or the Supreme Court itself.

Here, it suffices that the on-ad disclosure is subject to strict scrutiny for a second, independent reason: because compelled speech is content-altering. "Mandating speech that a speaker would not otherwise make necessarily alters the content of the speech." Riley v. Nat'l Fed'n of Blind, 487 U.S. 781, 795 (1988); accord Stuart v. Camnitz, 774 F.3d 238, 246 (4th Cir. 2014) ("A regulation compelling speech is by its very nature content-based, because it requires the speaker to change the content of his speech or even to say something where he would otherwise be silent."). And because it is content-altering, it is subject to strict scrutiny. McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 140 (2003) (succinctly describing holding of Riley: "treating solicitation restriction that required fundraisers to disclose particular information as a content-based regulation subject to strict scrutiny because it necessarily altered the content of the speech.").

This change in content is the problem, even if the mandated content is neutral, factual, or otherwise non-ideological. Hurley v. Irish-Am. Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Group of Boston, 515 U.S. 557, 573 (1995) ("[The] general rule that the speaker has the right to tailor the speech, applies not only to expressions of value, opinion, or endorsement, but equally to statements of fact"); Denver Area Educ. Telcoms. Consortium v. FCC, 518 U.S. 727, 822-23 (1996) (Thomas, J., dissenting); accord

Greater Balt. Ctr. for Pregnancy Concerns, Inc. v. Mayor & City Council Balt., 721 F.3d 264, 303 (4th Cir. 2013) (Neimeyer, J., dissenting) (“strict scrutiny applies even in cases where the compelled disclosure is limited to factually accurate or non-ideological statements.”); Minn. Voters All. v. City of Saint Paul, No. 19-cv-0358 (WMW/HB), 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35423, at *11 (D. Minn. Mar. 2, 2020). See Clifton, 114 F.3d at 1314 (“there is a strong First Amendment presumption against content-affecting government regulation of private citizen speech, even where the government does not dictate the viewpoint.” Emphasis added).

Riley is very on-point here. After listing a number of the Court’s previous precedents against compelled speech, the Court says:

These cases cannot be distinguished simply because they involved compelled statements of opinion while here we deal with compelled statements of “fact”: either form of compulsion burdens protected speech. Thus, we would not immunize a law requiring a speaker favoring a particular government project to state at the outset of every address the average cost overruns in similar projects, or a law requiring a speaker favoring an incumbent candidate to state during every solicitation that candidate’s recent travel budget. Although the foregoing factual information might be relevant to the listener, and, in the latter case, could encourage or discourage the listener from making a political donation, a law compelling its disclosure would clearly and substantially burden the protected speech.

487 U.S. at 797-98. The requirement to state during every advertisement the candidate’s donors is just like the requirement to state during every solicitation the candidate’s recent travel budget. It may be factual and even potentially relevant to the listener, but it is all the same compelled, content-altering speech regulation.

And here the standard of review really does make a difference. Though Plaintiffs believe the informational interest is insufficient to survive exacting scrutiny in filed donor disclosure, here we have a requirement that the organization disclose the names of its donors within the content of the ad itself: it alters the content of the organization's speech in the messages it buys (in a way in which an informational filing is not really "speech"), and therefore is subject to strict scrutiny. And strict scrutiny means "presumptively unconstitutional." Reed, 576 U.S. at 163.

This is the essential difference between a regulation of "pure speech" and a regulation of "the mechanics of the electoral process." McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 345. See Doe, 561 U.S. at 212-13 (Sotomayor, J., concurring); accord ACLU of Nev., 378 F.3d at 992-94 ("Campaign regulation requiring off-communication reporting of expenditures made to finance communications does not involve the direct alteration of the content of a communication."). A regulation requiring filings with a state agency concerns the mechanics of the electoral process; a regulation requiring a speaker to read a state-mandated script affects pure speech, and therefore is subject to much greater scrutiny.

Second, the Plaintiffs believe that the on-ad disclosure of donors does betray their principles. Plaintiffs believe strongly in the privacy of their organizations and their donors. Amended Compl. ¶¶ 6, 40. Compelling them to speak this "government-drafted script" during messages they've paid for forces them to violate their deeply held, ideologically based commitment to privacy and philanthropic freedom. For organizations committed to limited government and personal freedom, saying the names of donors in your ad is abhorrent just as forcing pro-life groups to share factual information about abortion access is abhorrent.

IV. This Court’s National Organization for Marriage and the Supreme Court’s Citizens United decisions do not compel a different result.

Before rejecting the Plaintiffs’ three arguments, the District Court accepted the campaign finance framework offered by the State as the appropriate lens for viewing this case. Addendum at 8. The court below relied primarily on two cases: the Supreme Court’s decision in Citizens United v. FEC and this court’s decision in National Organization for Marriage v. McKee.

Plaintiffs prevail for two powerful reasons. First, they are engaged in genuine issue advocacy, not electioneering communications.⁶ Plaintiffs are not engaged in electioneering because their ads do not “support, oppose, promote, or attack” a candidate. Vermont Right to Life Committee, Inc. v. Sorrell, 758 F.3d 118, 122 (2nd Cir. 2014) (quoting Vermont’s independent-expenditure statute). Instead, Plaintiffs are providing information for voters’ consideration without supporting or attacking: “Issue advocacy conveys information and educates. An issue ad’s impact on an election, if it exists at all, will come only after the voters hear the information and choose — uninvited by the ad — to factor it into their voting decisions.” FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 470 (2007) (plurality).

As such, their claim should be analyzed under the NAACP line of cases for issue groups, not Buckley v. Valeo and its progeny, which apply to campaigns, parties, and PACs. See Ams. for Prosperity Found., 919 F.3d at 1180-81 (Ikuta, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (Buckley only applies in the “electoral context,” otherwise the higher strict scrutiny standard set by NAACP and its progeny govern compelled disclosure of non-electoral, nonprofit activity).⁷

Second, even if the Court disagrees and believes that the Buckley cases govern, Plaintiffs still prevail. When the court considers a compelled disclosure regime (the second, NAACP count) in the electoral context, it must survive exacting scrutiny, which means it must be justified by a “sufficiently important government interest,” and there must be a “substantial relation” tailoring the requirement to the interest. McKee, 649 F.3d at 55.⁸ In Vote Choice, this Court identified three such compelling interests: “forced disclosure may be warranted when the spotlighted information enhances voters’ knowledge about a candidate’s possible allegiances and interests, inhibits actual and apparent corruption by exposing large contributions to public view, or aids state officials in enforcing contribution limits.” Vote Choice, 4 F.3d at 32; accord Daggett v. Comm’n on Governmental Ethics & Election Practices, 205 F.3d 445 (1st Cir. 2000).

⁷ Interestingly, the law at issue in Buckley contained a provision designed to force campaign-style disclosure onto non-electoral issue groups such as Common Cause, the American Conservative Union, the American Civil Liberties Union and the environmental groups. The DC Circuit struck it down, and this part of the opinion below was not appealed to the Supreme Court. Buckley v. Valeo, 519 F.2d 821, 877-78 (D.C. Cir. 1975). See Lilian BeVier, Mandatory Disclosure, “Sham Issue Advocacy,” and Buckley v. Valeo: A Response to Professor Hasen, 48 UCLA L. REV. 285, 291 (2000).

⁸ As noted above, Plaintiffs believe strict scrutiny is the appropriate standard and that no difference between strict and exacting scrutiny exists, but reserves these arguments for their further appeals.

A. Defendants have a single, weak interest justifying their invasion of Plaintiffs' privacy.

Of those interests identified in Vote Choice, two do not apply here: there are no contribution limits for Plaintiffs because they are not campaign committees, political action committees, or political parties; and Plaintiffs are not candidate committees, and thus pose no threat of quid pro quo corruption. Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 357; Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 26 (1976).

Thus, there is only the voters' informational interest. That informational interest is the weakest of the government's interests in campaign finance. Consider McIntyre: "The simple interest in providing voters with additional relevant information does not justify a state requirement that a writer make statements or disclosures she would otherwise omit. . . . Ohio's informational interest is plainly insufficient to support the constitutionality of its disclosure requirement." 514 U.S. at 348-49. The Supreme Court generally treats the informational interest with less heft than the anti-corruption and anti-limit-avoidance interests. See, e.g., First Nat'l Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 777 (1978) ("The inherent worth of the speech in terms of its capacity for informing the public does not depend upon the identity of its source, whether corporation, association, union, or individual."); McIntyre, 415 U.S. at 348 n.11 (favorably quoting New York v. Duryea, 351 N.Y.S.2d 978, 996 (1974)). A candidate's stance on issues is likely more relevant information to voters than who contributed to support an organization sharing such information. Lilian BeVier, Mandatory Disclosure, "Sham Issue Advocacy," and Buckley v. Valeo: A Response to Professor Hasen, 48 UCLA L. REV. 285, 303 (2000).

As Judge Noonan asked rhetorically, “How do the names of small contributors affect anyone else’s vote? Does any voter exclaim, ‘Hank Jones gave $ 76 to this cause. I must be against it!’” Canyon Ferry Rd. Baptist Church of E. Helena, Inc. v. Unsworth, 556 F.3d 1021, 1036 (9th Cir. 2009) (Noonan, J., concurring). Judge Noonan’s pithy observation is backed up by social science showing that donor information is substantially less useful information for voters than party affiliation and major endorsements. Dick Carpenter and Jeffrey Milyo, The Public’s Right to Know Versus Compelled Speech: what does social science research tell us about the benefits and costs of campaign finance disclosure in non-candidate elections?, 40 FORDHAM URB. L.J. 603, 618-23 (2012).

The informational interest is not an unlimited warrant for government to require any information from any person or organization that speaks about politics broadly defined. Doe, 561 U.S. at 206-08 (Alito, J., concurring). The government cannot successfully assert an informational interest in funders of issue advocacy; such an interest must be tightly tied to electioneering to be constitutional. Citizens Union of N.Y. v. AG of N.Y., 408 F. Supp. 3d 478, 507-08 (S.D.N.Y. 2019).

Moreover, if the Court disagrees with Plaintiffs on the speaker privacy (McIntyre) count, then the informational interest in donor disclosure is significantly lessened because the sponsoring organization will be apparent on the face of every advertisement. Who sponsored the ad “will signify more about the candidate’s loyalties than the disclosed identity of an individual contributor will ordinarily convey.” Vote Choice, 4 F.3d at 35.

Considering these arguments, the Tenth Circuit would say of disclosure of express advocacy for ballot measures, “Perhaps [the Supreme Court’s] view can be summarized as ‘such disclosure has some value, but not that much.’” Sampson v. Buescher, 625 F.3d 1247, 1257 (10th Cir. 2010). The compelled disclosure of donors to Plaintiffs has even less value, as they seek to engage only in non-express advocacy. In short, Defendants have only one shaky pillar on which to base their invasion of Plaintiffs’ privacy, and it’s worth is “some, but not that much,” and certainly not enough to prevail here.

B. The Rhode Island statute is not tailored to the government’s actual interest.

i. Rhode Island’s filing requirements are not sufficiently tailored.

To survive exacting scrutiny, the law must show a “substantial relation” or “substantial nexus” between the asserted interest and the ends used.⁹ McKee, 649 F.3d at 56; Vote Choice, 4 F.3d at 32. Rhode Island’s lack of tailoring is evident from the expansive scope of its statute compared to those in other states cited in the briefing. Rhode Island’s statute, unlike Maine’s, has no presumption or escape hatch. McKee, 649 F.3d at 43. Unlike Vermont’s, it has no qualifier for “supports, promotes, opposes, or attacks” — mere mention of a candidate or referendum is sufficient. Sorrell, 758 F.3d at 122. Unlike the federal regulation, Rhode Island’s statute covers general fund donors. Independence Institute v. FEC, 216 F. Supp. 3d 176, 185 (D.D.C.

⁹ Circuit courts disagree about whether exacting scrutiny in the disclosure context requires narrow tailoring. See Iowa Right to Life Comm., Inc. v. Tooker, 717 F.3d 576, 591 (8th Cir. 2013) (discussing different circuit opinions).

2016). Finally, unlike the laws in Vermont and Delaware, it applies to both candidates and ballot initiatives. Sorrell, 758 F.3d at 122; Del. Strong Families v. AG of Del., 793 F.3d 304, 307 (3d Cir. 2015).

The fact that Rhode Island covers general fund donors is especially problematic. As the D.C. Circuit has pointed out, donors to a general fund for an issue organization may not support the organization's issue advocacy even if they support the totality of the organization's activities. Van Hollen v. FEC, 811 F.3d 486, 497 (D.C. Cir. 2016). This reflects both the weakness of the governmental interest (because the government is providing voters with poor quality information, as many of the donors may not actually support the particular ad) and the weakness of the fit (because many of the donors being disclosed may not actually support the ad, but the law scoops them into disclosure anyway).

As a result, in a host of ways, Rhode Island's law is the most all-encompassing, most aggressive, most speech-regulating of all the examples offered by Defendants. It cannot stand.

ii. Rhode Island's on-ad disclosure requirements are not narrowly tailored.

The requirement to disclose the sponsor and top donors on the face of any advocacy message must survive not exacting scrutiny, but strict scrutiny. Supra at 15-16; accord ACLU of Nev., 378 F.3d at 987 (“[N]othing in McConnell v. FEC] undermines McIntyre's understanding that proscribing the content of an election communication is a form of regulation of campaign activity subject to traditional strict scrutiny.”). Strict scrutiny is “a standard imposing a strong presumption of invalidity.” Vieth v. Jubelirer, 541 U.S. 267, 294 (2004).

The 9th Circuit’s decision in ACLU of Nevada is an excellent guide to the appropriate resolution of this claim. There, the 9th Circuit draws a strong line between regulations that requiring filings and disclosures to agencies and regulations that require disclaimers and disclosures on the face of the communication itself. ACLU of Nev., 378 F.3d at 987. The 9th Circuit described it as a “constitutionally determinative distinction between on-publication identity disclosure requirements and after-the-fact reporting requirements.” Id. at 991. This is so because “requiring a publisher to reveal her identity on her election-related communication is considerably more intrusive than simply requiring her to report to a government agency for later publication how she spent her money. The former necessarily connects the speaker to a particular message directly, while the latter may simply expose the fact that the speaker spoke.” Id. at 992 (9th Cir. 2004). This regulation is even more intrusive because it requires on-message disclosure not only of the speaker directly, but financial supporters behind the speaker.

The U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of California struck down a very similar on-ad donor-disclosure requirement in that state for several reasons related to tailoring. Cal. Republican Party v. Fair Political Practices Comm’n, No. CIV-S-04-2144 FCD PAN, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22160, at *17 (E.D. Cal. Oct. 27, 2004).¹⁰

¹⁰ A different federal district court judge later stated that California Republican Party

First, presuming the rest of the statute is constitutional, contributor information is already available online from the Defendants, such that adding it to the advocacy message itself significantly affects the content of the message while adding very little additional informational value. Journalists, opponents, and citizens can already access the same information at the board’s website. Id. at *17.

Second, cutting the standard off at the top five donors “require[s] [advocacy] committees to single out on the face of the document [five] out of tens of thousands of contributors, many of whom also make sizeable contributions. This ‘visual byte’ provides a limited and potentially distorted picture of a [committee’s] contributors.” Id. at *17-18.

Third, the information may “mislead voters because these contributors may not endorse the message in the advertisement. Contributions are made to [committee’s] for many reasons, including agreement with a [committee’s] general philosophy, support of certain platform positions, or simply opposition to the competing party. The [committees] in turn use this funding to support a wide variety of activities, including dissemination of advertisements in support of, or opposition to, myriad candidates and ballot measures. It is not difficult to imagine a situation in which the contributor will be identified as a major donor on an advertisement was no longer good law because it used strict scrutiny, whereas in a later case the Supreme Court clarified that only exacting scrutiny was appropriate for disclosure requirements. Yes on Prop B v. City & Cty. of S.F., No. 20-cv-00630-CRB, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29200, at *7 n.4 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 20, 2020). However, this confuses disclosure laws that require filings with a state agency, which are subject to exacting scrutiny, with content-altering laws that require disclosure on the face of the advocacy message itself, which are subject to strict scrutiny under NIFLA.

containing a political message with which the contributor does not agree. To the contrary, it seems nearly inevitable in light of the plethora of positions advocated by the political parties in a given year.” Id. at 18-21.

All of these concerns are equally present in the Rhode Island setting. If the Plaintiffs are unsuccessful on counts I and II (which were not at issue in the California case because the political party was engaging in direct advocacy), then their organizational and contributor records would already be available for anyone to access on the Board’s website. Zeroing in on the top five contributors to the general fund potentially provides irrelevant information, especially for a national organization like Illinois Opportunity Project. Such a group’s top five donors may be from different states, but its sixth largest donor may be from Rhode Island but won’t be listed on the ad. And many donors may give for reasons unrelated to the particular ad. If a donor was motivated to give to support issue advocacy in another state, or because of Plaintiffs’ work on another issue, or to support general office operations rather than issue-oriented advertisements, all this would be disclosed, yet none of it would provide Rhode Islanders with particularly interesting or relevant information. See Allison Hayward, “Junk Disclosure,” Institute for Free Speech (Feb. 11, 2011), <https://www.ifs.org/blog/junk-disclosure-a-series-on-stupid-disclaimers/>. This Court should follow the California Republican Party decision in concluding that the on-ad disclosure flunks strict scrutiny.¹¹

¹¹ Citizens United’s paragraphs on on-ad disclaimer are not determinative. There, the Supreme Court only considered an on-ad statement that “___ is responsible for the content of this advertising” and that “the communication ‘is not authorized by any

C. The Rhode Island statute is not automatically acceptable under existing binding precedent.

Within a campaign-finance framework, the case most directly relevant is this court's decision in National Organization for Marriage v. McKee.¹² The Maine statute at issue in McKee, however, is distinguishable on several points.¹³

First, and most importantly, the challenge in McKee was based on an entirely different legal theory. There, the plaintiffs argued that the statute was “unconstitutionally vague and overbroad.” 649 F.3d at 40. The plaintiffs in McKee did not base their arguments on McIntyre or NAACP; neither case is even mentioned in the decision.¹⁴ This is a new challenge, raising new legal theories, and though McKee's candidate or candidate's committee.” 558 U.S. at 366. And it only considered them under exacting scrutiny as a disclosure requirement. Id. The Supreme Court did not consider or decide a compelled-speech challenge to the on-ad disclosure, and so its holding should not be read as deciding an argument that was not even presented to it. See, e.g., Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R. v. Aurelius Inv., LLC, 140 S. Ct. 1649, 1665 (2020). And the state interests or narrow tailoring may be different for direct sponsor identification or independent-expenditure identification as opposed to on-ad donor disclosure.

language may in some instances have relevance, its holdings as to one set of challenges are not dispositive of the issues presented in this case.

Second, the Maine statute only established a presumption that an issue ad that mentioned a candidate close to an election was an electioneering communication; the ad sponsor could rebut the presumption through an administrative hearing. Id. at 43. Rhode Island, by contrast, automatically and irrefutably classifies all such speech as electioneering communication, with no opportunity to show that an ad should not be so classified. One can suppose any number of circumstances when an advertisement may mention a candidate for office without intending electioneering; as just one example, if an American Legion post puts up fliers or sends out post-cards inviting people to attend a Veterans Day ceremony, and lists the local congressman as the keynote speaker — then the Legion is engaging in an electioneering communication and must register and disclose its donors. In Maine, such a group could prove its innocence to the relevant authorities; in Rhode Island no such option exists. This distinction significantly undermines Rhode Island’s supposedly narrow tailoring.

Third, the Maine statute only applied to speech mentioning candidates. The Rhode Island statute covers speech about both candidates and ballot referenda. Though Illinois Opportunity Project wishes to share information about incumbents who may be candidates for reelection, Gaspee Project wishes only to share information relevant to ballot referenda. The government’s interest in regulating speech about ballot issues is lower than for speech about candidates. McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 356; see Buckley v. Am. Constitutional Law Found., 525 U.S. 182, 203 (1999).

Fourth, the District Court overstates McKee's holding that there is no difference between express advocacy and issue advocacy. Addendum at 7. To the contrary, McKee recognizes: "The division between pure 'issue discussion' and 'express advocacy' of a candidate's election or defeat is a conceptual distinction that has played an important, and at times confounding, role in a certain set of modern Supreme Court election law precedents." McKee at 35. This Court took a pass on resolving any of these confounding concerns: "We ultimately conclude, however, that the distinction is not important for the issues addressed in this appeal" because of the specific vagueness and overbreadth challenges before the court. Id. Here, however, this distinction is front and center for the NAACP claim.

The other cases cited by the District Court are also distinguishable. The Vermont statute at issue in Sorrell defined an electioneering communication as one which "refers to a clearly identified candidate for office and that promotes or supports a candidate for that office or attacks or opposes a candidate for that office." 758 F.3d at 122. Thus, the hypothetical American Legion postcard would not have been covered by the Vermont statute because it did not "promote, support, attack, or oppose" a candidate. Many other forms of issue communication, such as a legislative scorecard that presented straightforward information on an incumbent's record, would also likely not fall within that statute's ambit. See Ams. for Prosperity v. Grewal, No. 3:19-cv-14228-BRM-LHG, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 170793, at *57 (D.N.J. Oct. 2, 2019)

(discussing Americans for Prosperity issue-based legislative scorecard). In Rhode Island, however, all these communications would be covered for merely mentioning an incumbent legislator’s name. Finally, Independence Institute v. FEC, 216 F. Supp. 3d 176 (D.D.C. 2016), summarily aff’d 137 S. Ct. 1204 (2017), required disclosure only for donors who supported the particular advertisement. Id. at 185. Rhode Island’s law reaches donors of at least $1,000 to the organization’s general fund, regardless of whether any of the money actually even paid for the particular advertisement. R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25.3-1(h).

The statutes at issue in both Sorrell and Delaware Strong Families covered only candidates; neither case speaks to the Gaspee Project’s issue advocacy focused on referenda. Sorrell, 758 F.3d at 122; Del. Strong Families, 793 F.3d at 307. Like McKee both Sorrell and Delaware Strong Families focused on overbreadth and vagueness — with no mention of McIntyre or NAACP. The Montana statute at issue in Mangan required registration and disclaimer, but did not necessarily mandate donor disclosure for issue advocacy groups. N.A. for Gun Rights, Inc. v. Mangan, 933 F.3d 1102, 1110 (9th Cir. 2019). In sum, the cases cited by Defendants all reviewed different types of challenges brought against laws that were more narrowly constructed than the all-encompassing Rhode Island statute at issue here. As such, none resolve the issues presented in this particular case.

Citizens United is the final case relied upon by the District Court and Defendants. Citizens United concerned “pejorative” ads nationwide promoting Hillary: the Movie, which was itself a critique of a sitting U.S. Senator running for President. Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 320 (2010). Citizens United, which produced the movie, also would pay to “make Hillary available [for free] on a video-on-demand channel called ‘Elections ‘08.’” Id. The content of the movie “depicts interviews with political commentators and other persons, most of them quite critical of Senator Clinton.” Id.

In short, Hillary: the Movie was political commentary about a political candidate.¹⁵ Thus, it differs from Plaintiffs’ advocacy in three substantial ways: (1) it was targeted to voters nationwide because she was a candidate. Plaintiff IOP’s advocacy is targeted to citizens specific to their legislative districts because of their incumbent representatives. Plaintiff Gaspee Project’s advocacy is targeted to citizens specific to their municipalities because of their referendum choices. If Hillary: the Movie had only run in New York, the Court may have seen it in a different light, as Clinton represented New York in the U.S. Senate at the time, and thus it could have been genuine issue advocacy specific to the legislator’s district; (2) it was clearly “critical” and “pejorative,” whereas Plaintiffs’ advocacy will be primarily informational; and (3) perhaps most importantly, Citizens United argued the movie was issue advocacy, but nothing in the record indicated that it talked about a specific policy, vote, or legislative initiative as opposed to a candidate. Plaintiffs’ advocacy, by contrast, will be specific to particular policy questions important in these communities. For all these reasons, Citizens United does not support Defendants' motion.

Indeed, when the Seventh Circuit reviewed a Wisconsin statute which labeled all issue advocacy that made references to a candidate as an electioneering communication when run close in time to an election, the state regulators leaned heavily on the same paragraph from Citizens United. The Seventh Circuit replied: "It's a mistake to read Citizens United as giving the government a green light to impose political-committee status on every person or group that makes a communication about a political issue that also refers to a candidate." Wis. Right to Life, Inc. v. Barland, 751 F.3d 804, 836-37 (7th Cir. 2014). The Seventh Circuit said such a rule regulating ads run in the 30/60-day preelection period would put "a serious chill on debate about public issues, which does not stop during election season." Id. at 837. The opinion then provides a number of examples of groups engaging in such advocacy; Judge Sykes could just as easily have written, "A local free-market group wants to provide voters with information about comparative tax burdens in advance of a local referendum to raise taxes. Or a national labor-reform group wants to mail out fliers with a legislative scorecard on an important union-related bill." All would have fallen within the scope of Wisconsin's disclosure statute that the court enjoined.

Discussing a similar independent-expenditure statute in Minnesota, an en banc 8th Circuit similarly cautioned against allowing states to use Citizens United to "sidestep strict scrutiny by simply placing a 'disclosure' label on laws imposing the substantial and ongoing burdens typically reserved for PACs[, as this] risks transforming First Amendment jurisprudence into a legislative labeling exercise.” Minn. Citizens Concerned for Life, Inc. v. Swanson, 692 F.3d 864, 875 (8th Cir. 2012). This Court should prevent similar mislabeling in this case.

D. The Court should also consider the burden on the Plaintiffs in this analysis.

The Supreme Court sometimes phrases “exacting scrutiny” as a balancing test, wherein “the strength of the governmental interest must reflect the seriousness of the actual burden on First Amendment rights.” Doe, 561 U.S. at 196 (quoting Davis v. FEC, 554 U.S. 724, 744 (2008)); accord Nat’l Org. for Marriage v. McKee, 666 F. Supp. 2d 193, 204 (D. Me. 2009); Moderate Party of R.I. v. Lynch, 764 F. Supp. 2d 373, 377 (D.R.I. 2011). In other words, the test also requires the Court to consider the burden on the Plaintiffs’ speech and association rights to weigh against the governmental interest.

While the state has one interest that is relatively weak, Plaintiffs and other issue-advocacy organizations and their members face burdens that are numerous, specific, and substantial: loss of privacy, fear of official retaliation, fear of activist harassment, greater difficulty at charitable solicitation, and an undermining of their messages’ effectiveness. Such burdens are very compelling and outweigh the government’s interest.

i. Plaintiffs and their members have a substantial interest in maintaining their privacy.

The first burden that Plaintiffs will suffer from the law is the loss of privacy. A desire for anonymity when speaking on issues may be motivated “by a desire to preserve as much of one’s privacy as possible.” McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 342. A business or association as well as an individual might wish to maintain that privacy. ACLU of Nev., 378 F.3d at 990. “[D]epriving individuals of this anonymity is a broad intrusion” into their private affairs. Id. at 988. The protections of the NAACP cases apply to popular and unpopular groups alike because they all have an interest in privacy. Gibson, 372 U.S. at 556-57; accord id. at 569-70 (Douglas, J., concurring).

Privacy is no less important for being ephemeral. It “has always been a fundamental tenet of the American value structure.” California v. Byers, 402 U.S. 424, 450 (1971) (Harlan, J., concurring) (quoting Robert McKay, Self-Incrimination and the New Privacy, 1967 SUP. CT. REV. 193, 210). Privacy is an end in itself that courts must respect and protect. United States v. Connolly, 321 F.3d 174, 188 (1st Cir. 2003). Privacy interests are especially pronounced when private financial information is involved. See Hughes Salaried Retirees Action Comm. v. Adm’r of the Hughes Non-Bargaining Ret. Plan, 72 F.3d 686, 695 n.8 (9th Cir. 1995). “[O]ur nation values individual autonomy and privacy,” United States v. Valdes-Vega, 738 F.3d 1074, 1076 (9th Cir. 2013), and the loss of that privacy is in itself a substantial burden.

ii. Plaintiffs and their members have a reasonable fear of official retaliation.

The second burden that Plaintiffs’ members and contributors will suffer as a result of the law is the fear of official retaliation. Buckley recognized that compelled disclosure may lead to “threats, harassment, or reprisals from ... Government officials.” 424 U.S. at 293. Similarly, McIntyre said, “[t]he decision in favor of anonymity may be motivated by fear of ... official retaliation.” 514 U.S. at 341. Companies or individuals could reasonably worry that their contributions to issue-advocacy groups could harm their standing with Rhode Island’s decision-makers. Nat’l Rifle Ass’n (NRA) v. City of Los Angeles, 2:19-cv-03212-SVW-GJS, at *13 (C.D. Cal. Dec. 19, 2019) (“Plaintiff Doe maintains he and other potential contractors are chilled from engaging in the bidding process because they are reluctant to reveal business ties with the NRA for fear of the stigma the City may attach to their bids and future business ventures. The legislative record establishes Doe’s fear of hostility is well-founded.”). There are a variety of formal and informal ways that officials could retaliate. Officials could look unfavorably on requests for meetings with the governor or other senior decision-makers, discount a company’s lobbying position on legislation or regulations, and otherwise close the door to the governor’s administration. That is a high price to pay for any person or entity that also wishes to financially support issue advocacy. Privacy and protection from disclosure is the best way to avoid the possibility of an official “enemies list.” See Lake v. Rubin, 162 F.3d 113, 115 (D.C. Cir. 1998).

iii. Plaintiffs and their members have a reasonable fear of harassment from activists outside government.

Though official retaliation is likely more informal and sub rosa, the reality of public retaliation is very visible and very real for companies and individuals.

Harassment by those outside government was the fear at the heart of NAACP, where members who were exposed would face “economic reprisal, loss of employment, threat of physical coercion, and other manifestations of public hostility.” 357 U.S. at 462-63. Thankfully there is no longer a segregated South with church bombings and burning crosses, but public hostility is still a characteristic of polarized politics. Grewal, No. 3:19-cv-14228-BRM, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 170793, at *61. Unfortunately, “disclosure becomes a means of facilitating harassment that impermissibly chills the exercise of First Amendment rights.” Doe, 561 U.S. at 207-08 (Alito, J., concurring).

Members and contributors may have a real fear that all these repercussions may follow from a decision to support issue advocacy. Newspapers are filled with examples from the past decade where publicly disclosed issue activities have led to substantial harassment.¹⁶

a. Disclosed donors suffer from economic retaliation.

Corporations that support issue-advocacy groups like Plaintiffs may find that disclosure forces them into unanticipated hot water. Target and Best Buy were subject to boycotts and brand damage when they gave money to a Chamber of Commerce affiliate that praised a candidate for governor in Minnesota who supported business-friendly policies. That candidate also supported traditional marriage. When their donations became public, they faced substantial backlash from customers and shareholders and were forced to apologize. See Taren Kingser & Patrick Schmidt, ¹⁶ Though a motion to dismiss is limited to complaint itself, briefs at this stage may still rely on facts available in the public record. O'Brien v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Tr. Co., 948 F.3d 31 (1st Cir. 2020) (“Because this appeal arises from an order of dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, we draw the operative facts primarily from the complaint. We may also incorporate facts from documents incorporated by reference into the complaint, matters of public record, and facts susceptible to judicial notice.”).

U.L. REV. 397, 427-428 (2015).

In another instance, retailers were protested for stocking carrots from a company whose owner donated to the Proposition 8 campaign in California. Maria Ganga, “Carrot firm’s olive branch,” L.A. Times (Oct. 9, 2008).¹⁷ A Hyatt hotel and a self-storage company were also targeted for boycotts based on their owners’ donations supporting Proposition 8. Id. Prominent executives also lost their jobs after their donations became public. Though these examples all related to fights over the definition of marriage, many may reasonably fear precipitating the wrath of organized labor thru such disclosure. A union-backed group in Washington State has targeted the board

In polarized times, taking sides on difficult topics in the public square often prompts a harassing response from activists of the opposite view. See Katie Rogers and Annie Karni, “Trump’s Opponents Want to Name His Big Donors. His Supporters Say It’s Harassment,” N.Y. Times (Aug. 8, 2019).²³

b. Disclosed donors may be subject to physical retaliation.

When Mayor Mitch Landrieu of New Orleans decided to remove the city’s four Confederate monuments, he found himself blacklisted among construction companies. When he finally did secure a crane, opponents poured sand in the gas tank and interfered with its operation. According to the Mayor, “We were successful, but only because we took extraordinary security measures to safeguard equipment and workers, and we agreed to conceal their identities.” Mitch Landrieu, IN THE SHADOW OF STATUTES: A WHITE SOUTHERNER CONFRONTS HISTORY, 2-3 (Penguin 2018). The owner of a contracting company that agreed to remove monuments and his wife received death threats, and his car was set ablaze in the parking lot of his office. Id. at 187. The City had to keep secret the identities of the companies that bid on the work and promised law enforcement protection to the winners. Id. at 192.

Sometimes, public hostility against people associated with controversial views is manifested as property crimes such as graffiti. See, e.g., Savannah Pointer, “Man Arrested After Allegedly Vandalizing Chick-fil-A with Political Messages,” Western J. (Oct. 3, 2018)²⁴; Anna Almendrala, “Chick-Fil-A In Torrance, Calif., Graffitied With

c. Disclosed donors are subject to other forms of hostility.

In many instances, intimidation tactics stop short of physical violence but still cross legal and social lines from legitimate protest into illegitimate harassment, especially as the Internet adds a whole new level of possibilities for harassment. Posting donor information online, including one’s home address, opens the door to harassment on a heretofore unimaginable scale, where an activist in one state can target a someone in minute detail. Doe, 561 U.S. at 207-08 (Alito, J., concurring); accord Frank v. City of Akron, 303 F.3d 752, 753 (6th Cir. 2002) (Boggs, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc). Any donor may reasonably fear that activists who care passionately about the environment, labor rights, gun rights, or any other issue may target them over the Internet.

Charitable solicitation is a form of free speech protected by the First Amendment. Ill. ex rel. Madigan v. Telemarketing Assocs., 538 U.S. 600, 611-12 (2003). The law makes it harder for Plaintiffs and any other issue-advocacy group to raise the funds they need to undertake their missions. Vote Choice, Inc. v. Di Stefano, 814 F. Supp. 195, 200 (D.R.I. 1993) (donor disclosure makes fundraising more difficult); United States Servicemen's Fund v. Eastland, 488 F.2d 1252, 1265-67 (D.C. Cir. 1973), vacated on other grounds, 421 U.S. 491 (1975); Canyon Ferry Rd. Baptist Church of E. Helena, Inc., 556 F.3d at 1036 (Noonan, J., concurring); In re Bay Area Citizens Against Lawsuit Abuse, 982 S.W.2d 371, 379 (Tex. 1998); Nat'l Fed'n of Republican Assemblies v. United States, 218 F. Supp. 2d 1300, 1312 n.13 (S.D. Ala. 2002); Nat'l Rifle Ass'n, 2:19-cv-03212-SVW-GJS, at *18; Pollard v. Roberts, 283 F. Supp. 248 (E.D. Ark.), aff'd per curiam, 393 U.S. 14 (1968). Compelled disclosure makes people less likely to donate, and that increases Plaintiffs' difficulty in fundraising to support their mission.

v. The law will decrease the effectiveness of Plaintiffs' messages.

Finally, Plaintiffs fear the disclosure of their donors will decrease the effectiveness of their messages. Their members and supporters may fear that disclosure will make the messages their donations support less effective. "Nondisclosure could require the debate to actually be about the merits of the proposition on the ballot. Indeed, the Supreme Court has recognized that '[a]nonymity ... provides a way for a writer who may be personally unpopular to ensure that readers will not prejudge her message simply because they do not like its proponent.'" Sampson, 625 F.3d at 1256-57 (quoting McIntyre, 514 U.S. at 342); accord Wash. Post, 944 F.3d at 515 ("many political advocates today also opt for anonymity in hopes their arguments will be debated on their merits rather than their makers.”). Social science backs up what courts have already concluded. Travis N. Ridout, et al., Sponsorship, Disclosure, and Donors: Limiting the Impact of Outside Group Ads, 68 POL. RESEARCH Q. 154 (2015) (viewers respond more positively to an ad from an unknown group than to an ad from a known group or campaign); id. at 163 (disclosure leading to news reports about a group’s big donors reduces that group’s message effectiveness).

Plaintiffs reasonably believe disclosure of their donors may distract from the effectiveness of their message. If people do not like political donors generally, or certain political donors in particular, they may fixate on the donors behind the speaker rather than the content of the message. Plaintiffs believe the content of the message itself, the power of the idea it conveys, should command our attention.

Plaintiffs, then, face multiple burdens from the law: their privacy is invaded, they have well-founded fears of official and activist retaliation, their charitable solicitation will be more difficult, and their messages may be less effective. All of this must be weighed against the one weak government interest offered.

CONCLUSION

From the Federalist Papers forward, this nation has enjoyed a long history of anonymous advocacy in the public square. Government regulations requiring authors to alter their pure speech — to identify themselves and now their financial supporters as well — are unconstitutional, even in the context of express electoral advocacy. And though government may compel donor disclosure on campaigns, it may not do so for issue advocacy organizations like the NAACP and these Plaintiffs. The District

Court's decision granting the motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim should be reversed.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

Mary S. McElroy, United States District Judge.

The plaintiffs, the Gaspee Project and Illinois Opportunity Project, have filed this action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 asserting that the disclosure and disclaimer provisions of Rhode Island’s Independent Expenditures and Electioneering Communications for Elections Act, R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1 et seq. (“the Act”), are facially violative of the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. The defendants, the members of the Rhode Island Board of Elections (collectively, “the Board”), have filed a Motion to Dismiss the plaintiffs’ Amended Complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), asserting that the Act’s requirements contested here—the disclosure of donations in excess of a certain threshold, the disclaimer of sponsorship of electioneering, and the disclosure of top donors—are constitutionally permissible.

The avowed governmental purpose for these requirements is for an electorate that is informed and aware of who or what is spending money in its elections. It is for the Court to determine whether this state interest is sufficiently important to impose the Act’s burdens on political speech and whether those burdens are substantially related to achieving that end.

The Court determines that the Act meets the applicable standard of constitutional review and, for the following reasons, GRANTS the Board’s Motion to Dismiss (ECF No. 22).

I. BACKGROUND

A. The Rhode Island Independent Expenditures and Electioneering Communications Act

Passed in 2012, the Act makes clear that it is lawful for a person, business entity, or political action committee to spend money in elections. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(a). But any “independent expenditure” or “electioneering communication” where the money spent exceeds $1,000 within a calendar year, must be reported to the Board, along with certain specified information about the entities and the donors. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(b), (h). The Act defines these two key phrases as follows:¹

¹ These definitions are found in a companion statute, the Rhode Island Campaign Contributions and Expenditures Reporting Act, R.I.G.L. § 17-25-3, but are expressly incorporated into the Act at issue here. See R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(a) (“All terms used in this chapter shall have the same meaning as defined in § 17-25-3.”).

- “Independent expenditure” is as any spending that “when taken as a whole, expressly advocates the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate, or the passage or defeat of a referendum....” R.I.G.L. § 17-25-3(17).
- “Electioneering communication” is print, broadcast, cable, satellite, or electronic media communication that “unambiguously identifies a candidate or referendum” and is made “sixty (60) days before a general or special election or town meeting” or “thirty (30) days before a primary election” and “is targeted to the relevant electorate.” R.I.G.L. § 17-25-3(16). A communication is “targeted to the relevant electorate” if it “can be received by two thousand (2,000) or more persons in the district the candidate seeks to represent or the constituency voting on the referendum.” R.I.G.L. § 17-25-3(16)(i).

The required report to the Board for independent expenditures and electioneering communications where spending exceeds $1,000 in a calendar year must include the name, street address, city, state, zip code, occupation, and employer of the person responsible for the expenditure, the date and amount of each expenditure, and the year to date total. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(f). The report must also include a statement identifying the candidate or referendum that the expenditure is intended to promote along with an affirmative statement that the expenditure is not coordinated with the campaign in question. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(g). Additionally, the report must disclose the identity of all donors of an aggregate of $1,000 or more. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(h). This report must be filed after each time the person, business entity, or political action committee makes an independent expenditure or electioneering communication of, in the aggregate, an additional $1,000. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(d).

The Act also requires independent expenditures and electioneering communications to include disclaimers stating who paid for the communication. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-3(a). This includes a message stating “I am ___ (name of entity’s chief executive officer or equivalent), and ___ (title) of ___ (entity), and I approved its content.” R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-3(c). Additionally, tax-exempt organizations under § 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code and other exempt nonprofits² that “make or incur or fund an electioneering communication for any written, typed, or printed communication” must include on the communication a list of their top five donors during the one-year period prior to the date of the communication. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-3(a).

Only money contributed for the purposes of independent expenditures or electioneering communications must be reported as such.³ Should a donor prefer; donations can be expressly conditioned on non-use for independent expenditures or electioneering communications. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(i). The receiving entity must

² These other exempt nonprofits are “any organization described in § 501(c)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code that spends an aggregate annual amount of no more than ten percent (10%) of its annual expenses or no more than fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000), whichever is less, on independent expenditures, electioneering communications, and covered transfers as defined herein and certifies the same to the board of elections seven (7) days before and after a primary election and seven (7) days before and after a general or special election.” R.I.G.L. § 17-25-3(21).

then certify that the donation will not be used as such and the donor “will not be required to appear in the list of donors.” R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(i)(2); see also R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-3(a) (exempting opt-out donors from being listed as a top five donor).

B. The Plaintiffs’ Amended Complaint

The plaintiffs are 501(c)(4) organizations that plan to spend thousands of dollars on Rhode Island elections. (ECF No. 20 ¶¶ 7, 8, 28, 29.) The plaintiffs wish to do so anonymously, without the required disclosures, because they “are concerned that compelled disclosure of their members and supporters could lead to substantial personal and economic repercussions” such as “harassment, career damage, and even death threats for engaging and expressing their views in the public square.” Id. ¶ 35.

The plaintiffs therefore have filed suit against the Board under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, asserting the following:

- Count I: That R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(h), requiring the plaintiffs to disclose to the Board their members and supporters contributing $1,000 or more, is a violation of their First Amendment right to organizational privacy;
- Count II: That R.I.G.L. §§ 17-25.3-1, 3, requiring the plaintiffs to disclose their sponsorship, is a violation of their First Amendment right to anonymity in their free speech; and
- Count III: That R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-3, requiring the plaintiffs to disclose their top five donors, violates their First Amendment right against compelled speech.

The plaintiffs confirmed at oral argument that their claims are a facial challenge to the constitutionality of the Act. See also ECF No. 20 at 14 (plaintiffs’ Amended Complaint seeking to enjoin the Board from enforcing the Act “against Plaintiffs and other organizations that engage solely in issue advocacy”) (emphasis added). A facial challenge is not limited to a plaintiff's particular case and can only succeed where the plaintiff establishes "that no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid." John Doe No. 1 v. Reed, 561 U.S. 186, 194 (2010); United States v. Salerno, 481 US. 739, 745 (1987); see also Naser Jewelers, Inc. v. City Of Concord, N.H., 513 F.3d 27, 33 (1st Cir. 2008) ("In a facial attack case, it is plaintiff's burden to show that the law has no constitutional application."). A facial challenge requires from a court a cautious approach because it "threaten[s] to short circuit the democratic process by preventing laws embodying the will of the people from being implemented in a manner consistent with the Constitution." Ayotte v. Planned Parenthood of N. New Eng., 546 U.S. 320, 329 (2006).

II. MOTION TO DISMISS STANDARD

To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must state a claim that is plausible on its face. Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007). The Court assesses the sufficiency of the plaintiff's factual allegations in a two-step process. See Ocasio-Herandez v. Fortuno-Burset, 640 F.3d 1, 7, 11-13 (1st Cir. 2011). "Step one: isolate and ignore statements in the complaint that simply offer legal labels and conclusions or merely rehash cause-of-action elements." Schatz v. Republican State Leadership Comm., 699 F.3d 50, 55 (1st Cir. 2012). "Step two: take the complaint's well-pled (i.e., non-conclusory, non-speculative) facts as true, drawing all reasonable inferences in the pleader's favor, and see if they plausibly narrate a claim for relief." Id. "The relevant question ... in assessing plausibility is not whether the complaint makes any particular factual allegations but, rather, whether 'the complaint warrant[s] dismissal because it failed in toto to render plaintiffs’ entitlement to relief plausible.” Rodriguez-Reyes v. Molina-Rodriguez, 711 F.3d 49, 55 (1st Cir. 2013) (quoting Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 569 n.14 (2007)).

III. DISCUSSION

There are two preliminary issues the Court must decide to guide its constitutional analysis of the Act. First, woven into their Amended Complaint and their arguments on this motion, the plaintiffs seek to make a constitutional distinction between “express advocacy” and “issue advocacy.” (The plaintiffs consider themselves “issue advocacy” organizations.) Express advocacy “encompasses ‘communications that expressly advocate the election or defeat of a clearly identified candidate,’ Buckley, 424 U.S. at 80, while [issue advocacy communications] are communications that seek to impact voter choice by focusing on specific issues.” Del. Strong Families v. Attorney Gen. of Del., 793 F.3d 304, 308 (3d Cir. 2015). “[T]he core premise is that regulation of speech expressly advocating a candidate’s election or defeat may more easily survive constitutional scrutiny than regulation of speech discussing political issues more generally.” Nat’l Org. for Marriage v. McKee, 649 F.3d 34, 52 (1st Cir. 2011) (hereinafter, “NOM”).

But, “in light of Citizens United [v. Federal Election Com’n, 558 U.S. 310 (2010)] ... the distinction between issue discussion and express advocacy has no place in First Amendment review of these sorts of disclosure-oriented laws.” Id. at 54-55. See also Del. Strong Families, 793 F.3d at 308 (“Any possibility that the Constitution limits the reach of disclosure to express advocacy or its functional equivalent is surely repudiated by Citizens United.”); Vt. Right to Life Comm., Inc., 758 F.3d at 132 (“The Supreme Court has consistently held that disclosure requirements are not limited to ‘express advocacy’ and that there is not a ‘rigid barrier between express advocacy and so-called issue advocacy.’”); Indep. Inst. v. FEC, 216 F. Supp. 3d 176, 178 (D.D.C. 2016) (holding that “the Supreme Court and every court of appeals to consider the question” had “largely, if not completely, closed the door to the ... argument that the constitutionality of a disclosure provision turns on the content of the advocacy accompanying an explicit reference to an electoral candidate”), summarily aff’d, 137 S. Ct. 1204 (2017).

The second preliminary issue is the question of which framework the Court should employ to guide its analysis—or more specifically, what line of precedents this Court ought to follow. The Board argues that cases that considered disclosure and disclaimer laws similar to the Act at issue here, such as Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 310, and their progeny in the lower courts, provide the most recent, useful, and directly controlling analysis. The plaintiffs take a different tack. They instead challenge the Act under three different theories of First Amendment jurisprudence: the right to speaker privacy, the right to organizational privacy, and the right against compelled speech.

As explained below, the Court is persuaded that the Board’s analysis is directly applicable and therefore will first analyze the Act under that framework before discussing the plaintiffs’ distinguishable theories.

A. The Act Is Subject To An Exacting Scrutiny.

“Generally, ‘[l]aws that burden political speech are ‘subject to strict scrutiny’—that is, they must be narrowly tailored to further a compelling government interest.” Nat’l Assoc. for Gun Rights, Inc. v. Mangan, 933 F.3d 1102, 1112 (9th Cir. 2019) (quoting Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 340). But while “[d]isclaimer and disclosure requirements may burden the ability to speak, ... they ‘impose no ceiling on campaign-related activities ... and ‘do not prevent anyone from speaking.’” Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 366 (quoting Buckley, 424 U.S. at 64; McConnell v. Federal Election Com’n, 540 U.S. 93, 201 (2003)). Because disclosure and disclaimer laws are a “less restrictive alternative to more comprehensive regulations of speech,” they are subject to “exacting scrutiny,” a test that requires the Court to consider whether the law bears a “substantial relation” to a “sufficiently important” governmental interest. Id. at 366-67. See also Nat’l Org. for Marriage v. Daluz, 654 F.3d 115, 118 (1st Cir. 2011) (reviewing a First Amendment challenge to Rhode Island’s campaign finance disclosure laws under the “exacting scrutiny” test). Compared to strict scrutiny, exacting scrutiny is a lower standard for the government to meet. It does not require the government to select the least restrictive means of achieving its goal. Del. Strong Families v. Attorney Gen. of Del., 793 F.3d 304, 309 n.4 (3d Cir. 2015).

B. Is the Act Supported By A Sufficiently Important Governmental Interest?

The Board argues that the governmental interest at issue, an informed electorate, is achieved by the disclosure of who is financing political speech. This is an interest the Supreme Court has determined is sufficiently important with respect to disclosure and disclaimer laws. See Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 371 (holding that “disclosure permits citizens to react to the speech of corporate entities in a proper way ... [and] to make informed decisions and give proper weight to different speakers and messages”); Buckley, 424 U.S. at 66-67 (“[D]isclosure provides the electorate with information as to where political campaign money comes from and how it is spent by the candidate in order to aid the voters in evaluating those who seek federal office.”).

Indeed, “[i]n a republic where the people are sovereign, the ability of the citizenry to make informed choices among candidates for office is essential.” NOM, 649 F.3d at 57 (quoting Buckley, 424 U.S. at 14-15). This informational interest, however, “is not limited to informing the choice between candidates for political office.” Id. “As Citizens United recognized, there is an equally compelling interest in identifying the speakers behind politically oriented messages.” Id. The First Circuit has held that the informational interest is particularly important today:

“In an age characterized by the rapid multiplication of media outlets and the rise of internet reporting, the ‘marketplace of ideas’ has become flooded with a profusion of information and political messages. Citizens rely ever more on a message’s source as a proxy for reliability and a barometer of political spin. Disclosing the identity and constituency of a speaker engaged in political speech thus ‘enables the electorate to make informed decisions and give proper weight to different speakers and messages.’”

Id. (quoting Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 371).

The Board argues that the Act furthers the state’s informational interest by requiring the disclosure of independent expenditures in excess of $1,000 within a calendar year and electioneering communications in excess of $1,000 in the sixty days before a general election and thirty days before a primary election. The required reports detail who and what is spending the money, including who donated $1,000 or more, providing the public with an understanding “as to where the political campaign money comes from.” See Buckley, 424 U.S. at 66-67.

The Act also furthers the state’s “equally compelling interest in identifying the speakers behind politically oriented messages” by requiring those who spend more than $1,000 during that window to disclose their sponsorship on all electioneering communications, including—for 501(c)(3) and exempt nonprofits only—their top five donors. See NOM, 649 F.3d at 57; R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-3. The state’s informational interests are also advanced by the Board’s publication of these disclosures on its website. See NOM, 649 F.3d at 58 (noting that the state interest in disclosure is evidenced by internet publication).

The plaintiffs, on the other hand, argue that the state only has a “single, weak interest justifying their invasion of Plaintiffs’ privacy.” But nothing in the binding Supreme Court or First Circuit precedents indicate that the informational interest is weak; in fact, they express the opposite. NOM, 649 F.3d at 57 (describing the interest in “identifying the speakers behind politically oriented messages” as “compelling”); see also Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 371 (holding that “disclosure permits citizens ... to make informed decisions and give proper weight to different speakers and messages”). Moreover, the plaintiffs’ position depends upon there being a distinction between issue advocacy and express advocacy.⁴ As noted, however, the First Circuit has held that “the distinction between issue discussion and express advocacy has no place in First Amendment review of these sorts of disclosure-oriented laws.” NOM, 649 F.3d at 54-55.

The Court finds that the State’s interest in an informed electorate is sufficiently important to justify the Act’s disclosure and disclaimer requirements under the exacting scrutiny standard. See Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 368-69. “This transparency enables the electorate to make informed decisions and give proper weight to different speakers and messages.” Id. at 371.

C. Is the Act Substantially Related to the State’s Sufficiently Important Governmental Interest?

The Court finds that the Act’s disclosure and disclaimer requirements are substantially related to the State’s interest, serving as a balanced means of informing Rhode Island voters about who is spending large sums of money in elections. First, the Act is only triggered when certain expenditure thresholds are met, ensuring that “the government does not burden minimal political advocacy.” Nat’l Ass’n for Gun Rights, Inc., 933 F.3d at 1118. For independent expenditures, the Act applies when expenditures exceed $1,000 in a calendar year; for electioneering communications, the Act applies when expenditures exceed $1,000 in the sixty days before a general or special election or thirty days before a primary election.⁵ R.I.G.L. §§ 17-25.3-1(b); 17-25-3(16). The $1,000 threshold also applies to individuals whose donations meet or exceed that limit during an election cycle. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(h).

⁴ Specifically, the plaintiffs argue that the State cannot successfully assert an informational interest in who may fund issue advocacy; such an interest must be tightly tied to electioneering (that is, promoting or attacking a specific candidate) to be constitutional.

The timing limitations also narrow the Act's reach. "It is well known that the public begins to concentrate on elections only in the weeks immediately before they are held. There are short timeframes in which speech can have influence. The need or relevance of the speech will often first be apparent at this stage in the campaign." Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 334. As noted, for independent expenditures, only those that exceed $1,000 within a calendar year trigger the reporting requirement. R.I.G.L. § 17-25.3-1(b). For electioneering communications, the Act only covers communications made sixty or thirty days before an election, depending on the election type. R.I.G.L. § 17-25-3(16). The Court therefore agrees with the Board that Rhode Island's disclosure and disclaimer obligations for electioneering communications are "tied with precision to specific election periods," and are "therefore carefully tailored to pertinent circumstances." Nat'l Ass'n for Gun Rights, 933 F.3d at 1117.

Similarly, the Act is tailored only to those electioneering communications likely to influence Rhode Island elections. That is, those that "can be received by two thousand (2,000) or more persons in the district the candidate seeks to represent or the constituency voting on the referendum.” R.I.G.L. § 17-25-3(16)(i).

Moreover, the Act only applies to speech used in Rhode Island elections. By definition, for instance, “electioneering communication” is any “print, broadcast, cable, satellite, or electronic media communication ... that unambiguously identifies a candidate or referendum.” R.I.G.L. § 17-25-3(16). Both “independent expenditure” and “electioneering communication” are carefully limited to exclude news stories, commentaries, editorials, candidate debates or forums, and communications made by a business entity to its members or employees. R.I.G.L. §§ 17-25-3(16)(ii); 17-25-3(i).

Importantly, the Act provides an opt-out for donors who wish to support an organization but want to remain anonymous. Donors can designate that their contributions are not to be used for independent expenditures or electioneering communications and, after the person or entity certifies as such, “the donor will not be required to appear in the list of donors.” R.I.G.L. §§ 17-25.3-1(i)(1),(2). Thus, the Act narrowly targets only those donations specifically intended to be used for election communications.

It is noteworthy that the Act here is similar to Maine’s independent expenditure and disclaimer statute, which the First Circuit held to be constitutional under the exacting scrutiny test. See NOM, 649 F.3d at 61. The Maine statute, similarly to the Act’s requirements for independent expenditures, required reporting to the state election commission for any entity that “receives contributions or makes expenditures of more than $5000 annually” for the purpose of “promoting, defeating or influencing” a candidate’s election. Id. at 58. Additionally, the Maine statute required reporting for “anyone spending more than an aggregate of $100 for communications expressly advocating the election or defeat of a candidate.” Id. at 59. These provisions, the First Circuit held, “pose[] no First Amendment concerns.” Id. Indeed, the First Circuit noted that “the information that must be reported under this subsection is ... ‘modest,’ and it bears a substantial relation to the public’s ‘interest in knowing who is speaking about a candidate shortly before an election.’” Id. at 60 (quoting Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 369). Maine’s disclaimer requirements, like the Act here, were “minimal” and “unquestionably constitutional,” calling only for a statement of whether the message was authorized by a candidate and disclosure of the name and address of the person who made or financed the communication. Id. at 61.

The plaintiffs attempt to distinguish NOM on four grounds: that the Maine statute was challenged under different legal theories (vagueness and overbreadth); that the Maine statute provided an administrative hearing to rebut the presumption that an ad was an electioneering communication; that the Act covers general fund donors; and that the Maine statute applied only to candidates and not ballot referenda.

None of these grounds is persuasive as the holding in NOM did not depend upon the legal theory advanced. The NOM court applied an exacting scrutiny analysis to the law at issue, holding that “each of the challenged statutes pass muster under the First Amendment.” Id. at 61. This Court does the same. In any event, the plaintiffs' alternate legal theories, as discussed below, are not applicable to the instant dispute.

Further, the factual differences that the plaintiffs highlight are not fatal to the Act's constitutionality. The NOM holding did not depend on the possibility of an administrative hearing or that the statute did not mention ballot referenda. The Act here provides clear definition on what is, and is not, an independent expenditure or electioneering communication, properly tailoring the Act to the state's informational interest. See §§ 17-25-3(16), (17). Moreover, while the Act may cover general fund donors, it provides a method by which a donor can contribute anonymously. R.I.G.L. §§ 17-25.3-1(i)(1),(2).

The plaintiffs also attempt to distinguish Citizens United, but this falls flat because it depends again on a constitutional distinction in the express/issue advocacy dichotomy, which the Court holds is irrelevant to this analysis. See NOM, 649 F.3d at 54-55.

In all, the Court finds that the Act is substantially related to the state's interest of an informed electorate. The disclosure and disclaimer obligations are carefully limited to apply only to those who spend a significant sum to use traditional methods of political communication that are likely to reach a wide swath of the electorate during specific time periods.

D. The Plaintiffs' Constitutional Theories

1. The Right to Speaker Privacy

The plaintiffs assert that the Act's disclosure and disclaimer requirements are an unconstitutional violation of speaker privacy, relying primarily on McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Commission, 514 U.S. 334 (1995). In that case, the plaintiff, acting alone, violated an Ohio campaign-finance statute when at a public meeting she handed out fliers in opposition to an upcoming referendum without her name and address on the literature. Id. at 337. The Ohio statute at issue, which the Supreme Court held was an unconstitutional restriction on political speech, was in fact a blanket prohibition on all anonymous campaign literature. Id. at 338.

McIntyre is distinguishable, however, because it included an absolute fiat against the distribution of any campaign literature that did not contain the name and address of the person issuing the literature, which in effect “indiscriminately outlaw[ed]” anonymous political speech. See id. at 357. Here, the Act does not prohibit individual anonymous literature; it instead requires certain disclosures from organizations that meet specific contribution thresholds.⁶

Moreover, McIntyre does not provide the most recent framework under which to analyze the Act’s disclosure and disclaimer requirements. It is noteworthy that Citizens United “upheld the federal disclaimer provision without so much as mentioning McIntyre, noting that while disclaimer provisions ‘burden the ability to speak,’ they do not limit speech.” Vt. Right to Life Comm., Inc. v. Sorrell, 875 F. Supp. 2d 376, 399 (D. Vt. 2012), aff’d, 758 F.d 118 (2d Cir. 2014).

⁶The plaintiffs also point to Blakeslee v. St. Sauveur, 51 F. Supp. 3d 210 (D.R.I. 2014), another case, like McIntyre, that involved an absolute regulation of “pure speech,” prohibiting all anonymous political pamphleteering.

2. The Right to Organizational Privacy

The plaintiffs assert that the Act, because it would require them to disclose donors of $1,000 or more, unconstitutionally infringes on their right to organizational privacy. The plaintiffs rely upon NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson, 357 U.S. 449 (1958), where the Supreme Court struck down an Alabama state court order that required the NAACP to reveal the names and addresses of its members. In that case, the NAACP “made an uncontroverted showing that on past occasions revelation of the identity of its rank-and-file members has exposed these members to economic reprisal, loss of employment, threat of physical coercion, and other manifestations of public hostility.” 357 U.S. at 462. The Court therefore held that “disclosure of petitioner’s Alabama membership is likely to affect adversely the ability of petitioner and its members to pursue their collective effort to foster beliefs which they admittedly have the right to advocate, in that it may induce members to withdraw from the Association and dissuade others from joining it...” Id. at 462-63.

Here, the plaintiffs argue that they are “in the same stead as the NAACP.” (ECF No. 23-1 at 14.) “They are private associations of members and supporters who pool their resources to talk about issues ... [and] speak on issues important in their communities, just like the NAACP.” Id. They allege that they are concerned about disclosing their sponsors because “[a]cross the country, individual and corporate donors and staff of political candidates and issue causes are being subject to harassment, career damage, and even death threats.” (ECF No. 20 ¶ 35.) Further, they believe disclosure “will lead to declines in their membership and fundraising,

Id. ¶ 36.

While the plaintiffs do make these conclusory allegations about a concern of reprisals, they are “a far cry from the clear and present danger that white supremacist vigilantes and their abettors in the Alabama state government presented to members of the NAACP in the 1950s.” Citizens United v. Schneiderman, 882 F.3d 374, 385 (2d Cir. 2018). But more importantly, it is undisputed that the plaintiffs levy a facial challenge to the Act. A Court considering a facial challenge must determine if the statute at issue is unconstitutional in any application, not because of a party's particular circumstance. See Hightower v. City of Boston, 693 F.3d 61, 77-78 (1st Cir. 2012) (holding that for the plaintiff's “facial attack to succeed” he “would have to establish ... that the statute lacks any ‘plainly legitimate sweep’”). Only when a plaintiff makes an “as applied” constitutional challenge—that is, “to demonstrate that the statute, as applied to his or her particular situation, violates” constitutional principles—would the Court consider a plaintiff's individual burden. Hall v. INS, 253 F. Supp. 2d 244, 248 (D.R.I. 2003) (emphasis added). Having found that the Act meets the standard of exacting scrutiny, the plaintiffs' facial challenge cannot “establish that no set of circumstances exist under which the Act would be valid.” See Salerno, 481 U.S. at 745.

The result may be different had this been an as-applied challenge. Indeed, the Supreme Court, in rejecting a facial challenge to a disclosure requirement of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002, did not “foreclose possible future challenges to particular applications of that requirement” if a plaintiff could show a “reasonable probability that the compelled disclosure of a party’s contributors’ names will subject them to threat, harassment, or reprisals from either Government officials or private parties.” McConnell v. Federal Election Com’n, 540 U.S. 93, 197-98 (2003), overruled on other grounds by Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 310.

3. The Right Against Compelled Speech

The plaintiffs also argue that the Act’s on-ad, top-five donor disclaimer requirement is a form of compelled speech in violation of the First Amendment. See Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 705, 714 (1977) (holding that the First Amendment protects “both the right to speak freely and the right to refrain from speaking at all”). The plaintiffs principally rely upon Nat’l Inst. of Family & Life Advocates v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361 (2018) (hereinafter, “NIFLA”). There, the Supreme Court struck down a California statute that required medical clinics licensed to serve pregnant women to post a notice about their abortion rights. The Court concluded that the required notices were compelled speech: “licensed clinics must provide a government-drafted script about the availability of state-sponsored services, as well as contact information for how to obtain them. One of those services is abortion—the very practice that petitioners are devoted to opposing.” Id. at 2371.

The plaintiffs likewise call Rhode Island’s requirement to list their top donors a “government drafted script.” Thus, they claim, the Act compels them to alter their speech to incorporate the government’s message just like the pregnancy centers were forced to alter their speech to incorporate the government’s notice.

NIFLA (and the strict scrutiny analysis it requires) is distinguishable, however, because the speech compelled in that case was content based. Here, the disclosure requirements are content neutral. See Schneiderman, 882 F.3d at 382 (“Disclosure requirements are not inherently content-based nor do they inherently discriminate among speakers.”); see also Mass. Fiscal Alliance v. Sullivan, 2018 WL 5816344 at *3 (D. Mass. Nov. 6, 2018) (holding that a disclosure law passed constitutional muster and that “[NIFLA] does not command a different result, given the content-neutral nature of the [disclaimer] requirement in this case and the minimal burden placed on plaintiff’s speech”). The plaintiffs do not need to alter the meaning of their political messaging or support a position contrary to their views. They, and all similarly situated organizations, must disclose their top five donors in order to meet the state’s sufficiently important interest in informing the electorate of who “money comes from.” Buckley, 424 U.S. at 66-67. Under the exacting scrutiny standard by which the Act is properly analyzed, the minimally burdening disclosure and disclaimer requirements are substantially related to the state’s informational interest.

IV. CONCLUSION

The Act’s disclosure and disclaimer requirements are justified by the sufficiently important state interest of an informed electorate and any burdens on political speech that they may cause are substantially related to that state interest. The plaintiffs, therefore, cannot state a plausible claim that the Act is facially violative of First and Fourteenth Amendment rights. The Board's Motion to Dismiss the plaintiffs' Amended Complaint (ECF No. 22) therefore is GRANTED.

Plaintiffs,

v.

Diane C. Mederos, et al.,

Defendants.

Case No. 1:19-cv-00609-MSM-LDA

Pursuant to Fed. Rule of Civ. Pro. 15(a)(1)(B), Plaintiffs file this first amended complaint as of right within the window of time provided by the Rule.

INTRODUCTION

1. Stretching back to the founding era and The Federalist Papers, freedom of speech has included the right to engage in anonymous issue advocacy concerning important public issues. Talley v. California, 362 U.S. 60 (1960); McIntyre v. Ohio Election Comm., 514 U.S. 334 (1995). See The Federalist Papers (Charles R. Kesler and Clinton Rossiter, eds., 2003).

2. Similarly, the freedom of association includes the right of private individuals to band together for common purposes without government prying into those associations' membership or donor lists. NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson, 357 U.S. 449 (1958); Gibson v. Fla. Legislative Investigation Comm., 372 U.S. 539 (1963).

3. During certain time periods proximate to elections, Rhode Island statutes require organizations engaged in issue advocacy to disclose the identity of their members and supporters to the Defendant members of the State Board of Elections and the general public. Collectively, Defendants are referred to as the “Board.”

4. The statutes also require that organizations engaged in issue advocacy identify themselves to the Board and disclose certain information on the face of an issue ad.

5. Plaintiffs, the Gaspee Project and Illinois Opportunity Project, intend to engage in issue advocacy in Rhode Island concerning referenda and legislators up for votes in fall 2020. If Plaintiffs were to engage in their planned issue advocacy, they would be required to report their sponsorship and disclose their donors to the Board.

6. To protect their privacy and that of their donors, Plaintiffs bring this suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, seeking declaratory and injunctive relief to protect their core First Amendment rights to free speech and association.

PARTIES

7. Plaintiff the Gaspee Project is a 501(c)(4) social-welfare organization based in Cranston, Rhode Island.

8. Plaintiff Illinois Opportunity Project is a 501(c)(4) social-welfare organization based in Chicago, Illinois.

9. Defendant Diane C. Mederos is sued in her official capacity as the Chairwoman of the Rhode Island State Board of Elections, which has its offices in Providence, Rhode Island.

10. Defendant Stephen P. Erickson is sued in his official capacity as the Vice-Chairman of the Rhode Island State Board of Elections, which has its offices in Providence, Rhode Island.

11. Defendant Jennifer L. Johnson is sued in her official capacity as a member of the Rhode Island State Board of Elections, which has its offices in Providence, Rhode Island.

12. Defendant Richard H. Pierce is sued in his official capacity as a member of the Rhode Island State Board of Elections, which has its offices in Providence, Rhode Island.

13. Defendant Dr. Isadore S. Ramos is sued in her official capacity as a member of the Rhode Island State Board of Elections, which has its offices in Providence, Rhode Island.

14. Defendant David H. Sholes is sued in his official capacity as a member of the Rhode Island State Board of Elections, which has its offices in Providence, Rhode Island.

15. Defendant William E. West is sued in his official capacity as a member of the Rhode Island State Board of Elections, which has its offices in Providence, Rhode Island.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

16. This case raises claims under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. The Court has subject-matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 and 28 U.S.C. § 1343.

17. Venue is appropriate under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b) because the Defendants reside in and the events giving rise to the claim took place in the District of Rhode Island.

FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS

18. Persons, business entities, or political action committees which engage in “independent expenditures” and “electioneering communications” are subject to a number of regulations under Rhode Island law. See 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-1.

19. Independent expenditure entities “shall report all such campaign finance expenditures and expenses to the board of elections, provided the total of the money so expended exceeds one thousand dollars ($ 1000) within a calendar year, to the board of elections within seven (7) days of making the expenditure.” Id. at (b). Such reports “shall contain the name, street address, city, state, zip code, occupation, employer (if self-employed, the name and place of business), of the person responsible for the expenditure. . . .” Id. at (f).

20. “The report shall also include a statement identifying the candidate or referendum that the independent expenditure or electioneering communication is intended to promote the success or defeat, and affirm under penalty of false statement that the expenditure is not coordinated with the campaign in question. . . .” Id. at (g).

21. The report must also “disclose the identity of all donors of an aggregate of one thousand dollars ($ 1000) or more to such person, business entity or committee within the current election cycle. . . .” Id. at (h).

22. When an independent expenditure entity publishes an electioneering communication, it must include in the communication its name, the name and title of its chief executive, and a list of its “Top Five Donors’ followed by a list of the five (5) persons or entities making the largest aggregate donations to such person, business entity or political action committee during the twelve (12) month period .

. . .” 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-3(a) (printed materials), (c) (television advertisements), (d) (radio advertisements), and (e) (robocalls).

23. Failure to comply with any section of the independent expenditure statute is punishable by a civil penalty levied by the Board. 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-4 (b). Knowing and willful violations are a criminal misdemeanor. Id. at (a).

24. An independent expenditure entity is subject to these rules when it publishes an “electioneering communication,” which is defined as “any print, broadcast, cable, satellite, or electronic media communication . . . that unambiguously identifies a candidate or referendum and is made either within sixty (60) days before a general or special election or town meeting for the office sought by the candidate or referendum; or thirty (30) days before a primary election, for the office sought by the candidate; and is targeted to the relevant electorate.” 17 R.I.G.L. 25-3(16).

25. The effect of this definition is to classify issue advocacy communications that mention a candidate or referendum as an independent expenditure if they are made within the windows of time proximate to an election.

26. The Gaspee Project is a state-focused 501(c)(4) organization that engages in issue advocacy communications around its mission to return government to the people. It supports market-based solutions that can transform lives through economic competitiveness, educational opportunity, and individual freedom.

27. The Illinois Opportunity Project (IOP) engages in issue advocacy in states across the country on issues that relate to its mission, which is to promote the social welfare and common good by supporting policies founded on the principles of liberty and free enterprise. It feels strongly that issue advocacy is a protected right under the First Amendment, and it has sought to vindicate that right with legal action. See IOP v. Bullock, 6:19-cv-00056-CCL (D.Mont.), and IOP v. Holden, 3:19-cv-17912-BRM-LHG (D.N.J.).

28. Plaintiff the Gaspee Project wishes to communicate its views on upcoming referenda to Rhode Island voters. In particular, it plans to spend over $1,000 on paid issue-advocacy communications by mail to thousands of Rhode Island voters in advance of the fall 2020 elections. These mailings will include information about pending local referenda that will affect property taxes. The mailings will inform voters of the impact of the referenda on taxes. The communications will not include any express ballot-advocacy as to the referenda.

29. Plaintiff Illinois Opportunity Project plans to spend over $1,000 on paid issue-advocacy communications by mail to thousands of Rhode Island voters in advance of the fall 2020 legislative elections. These mailings will provide information to voters about how their legislators voted on a bill expanding the power of government unions (2019 Senate Bill 712).

30. Plaintiffs intend to engage in substantially similar speech in Rhode Island in the future.

31. Plaintiffs both have received donations over $1,000 in the past and intend to solicit and accept donations over $1,000 in the future.

32. If Plaintiffs engage in their planned issue advocacy in Rhode Island, then any individual or organization that supports either with $1,000 or more in donations will have to be disclosed to the Board.

33. If Plaintiffs engage in their planned issue advocacy, they will be required to file reports with the Board and to include state-mandated information and disclaimers on all their materials.

34. If Plaintiffs engage in their planned issue advocacy in Rhode Island, they will be required to list their top five donors on their materials.

35. Plaintiffs are concerned that compelled disclosure of their members and supporters could lead to substantial personal and economic repercussions.

Across the country, individual and corporate donors and staff of political candidates and issue causes are being subject to harassment, career damage, and even death threats for engaging and expressing their views in the public square. Plaintiffs reasonably fear that their members, supporters, and leaders may also encounter similar reprisals from certain activists if their association with Plaintiffs are made public. This fear is especially pronounced for those donors whose names will be directly printed on the issue-advocacy materials.

36. Plaintiffs also believe that disclosure of their donors will lead to declines in their membership and fundraising, impacting their organizations' bottom lines and ability to carry out their missions.

37. Plaintiffs, therefore, bring this pre-enforcement challenge on behalf of themselves and their donors to vindicate their First Amendment rights. See Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus, 573 U.S. 149 (2014) (setting the standard for pre-enforcement challenges). Plaintiffs intend to engage in a course of conduct affected with constitutional interest (namely, issue advocacy). If they were to move forward with their course of conduct, their sponsorship of issue advocacy and their members' and supporters' contributions to their work would be subject to reporting and disclosure.

38. Because of these potential harms, these sections of the Rhode Island statutes will chill Plaintiffs' own speech and cause them not to engage in their desired communications, so long as these statutes remain enforceable law.

39. Plaintiffs have no remedy at law.

COUNT I

By requiring Plaintiffs to disclose their members and supporters, the Board violates the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

40. The allegations contained in all preceding paragraphs are incorporated herein by reference.

41. Plaintiffs and their donors enjoy a right to privacy in their association for free speech about issues. NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson, 357 U.S. 449 (1958); Gibson v. Fla. Legislative Investigation Comm., 372 U.S. 539 (1963). This right to privacy in association for free speech is protected by the First Amendment as incorporated against the states. Id. The statute violates that right by requiring disclosure of donations, ending the privacy of the speech-oriented association.

42. The statute cannot survive the most exacting standards of strict scrutiny. The U.S. Supreme Court has found a compelling interest in membership-disclosure regulations only when the association was engaged in or advocating for illegal activity. Familias Unidas v. Briscoe, 619 F.2d 391, 401 (5th Cir. 1980). Plaintiffs have no track record of illicit conduct nor have they ever embraced plainly unlawful means and ends; they are legitimate, social-welfare organizations engaged in issue advocacy. The government lacks a compelling interest in forcing them to disclose their members and supporters.

43. Plaintiffs and their members and supporters are entitled to an injunction under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 enjoining the continued enforcement of 17

R.I.G.L. 35.3-1(h) as applied to themselves and to other organizations engaged in issue advocacy.

COUNT II

By requiring Plaintiffs to disclose their sponsorship of issue advocacy, the Board violates the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

44. The allegations contained in all preceding paragraphs are incorporated herein by reference.

45. Plaintiffs enjoy a right to anonymity in their free speech about public-interest issues, a right protected by the First Amendment as incorporated against the states. Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc’y of N.Y., Inc. v. Vill. of Stratton, 536 U.S. 150 (2002); McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Comm’n, 514 U.S. 334 (1995); Blakeslee v. St. Sauveur, 51 F. Supp. 3d 210 (D.R.I. 2014). The statutes in question violate that right by requiring Plaintiffs to report to the Board when engaging in issue speech and to put a detailed disclaimer announcing their sponsorship on all of their issue-advocacy materials.

46. As applied to Plaintiffs’ planned activities, this statute affects genuine issue speech, not express advocacy concerning candidates or ballot measures. See Wis. Right to Life, Inc. v. Barland, 751 F.3d 804, 836-37 (7th Cir. 2014) (government does not have “a green light to impose political-committee status on every person or group that makes a communication about a political issue that also refers to a candidate.”).

47. Plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 enjoining the continued enforcement of 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-3 as applied to them and to other persons or organizations engaged solely in issue advocacy.

48. Plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction under 42 U.S.C. 1983 enjoining the continued enforcement of 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-1 as applied to them and to other persons or organizations engaged solely in issue advocacy.

COUNT III

By requiring Plaintiffs to disclose their top donors on their materials, the Board violates the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

49. The allegations contained in all preceding paragraphs are incorporated herein by reference.

50. Forcing Plaintiffs to list their top donors on their advertisements (17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-3(a) (printed materials), (c) (television advertisements), (d) (radio advertisements), and (e) (robocalls)) is compelled speech. Nat’l Inst. of Family & Life Advocates (NIFLA) v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361, 2371 (2018) (“By compelling individuals to speak a particular message, such notices alter the content of their speech.”). Because compelled speech is content-altering, such regulations are “presumptively unconstitutional” and subject to strict scrutiny. Id. The government cannot prove a compelling interest or narrow tailoring here.

51. Even if the compelled in-ad disclosure is analyzed under exacting scrutiny and the campaign-finance precedents rather than NIFLA, the government lacks a sufficient interest or a substantial nexus to justify this particular requirement. This type of disclosure substantially heightens the chilling effect on Plaintiffs and their members and contributors, while making a poor fit to any supposed government interest. Cal. Republican Party v. Fair Political Practices Comm'n, No. CIV-S-04-2144 FCD PAN, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22160, at *16-20 (E.D. Cal. Oct. 27, 2004) (granting injunctive relief against a similar statute in California).

52. Plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction under 42 U.S.C. 1983 enjoining the continued enforcement of 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-3 as applied to them and to other persons or organizations when the advertisement is genuine issue advocacy.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

Plaintiffs, the Gaspee Project and Illinois Opportunity Project, respectfully request that this Court:

- a. Declare that 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3, to the extent that it compels member and supporter disclosure for organizations engaged in issue advocacy, violates the Plaintiffs' right to freedom of speech and association under the First and Fourteenth Amendments;
- b. Declare that 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-1, in so far as it compels sponsor reporting for issue advocacy, violates the Plaintiffs' right to engage in anonymous speech under the First and Fourteenth Amendments;

- c. Declare that 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-3, to the extent that it compels sponsor disclosure for issue advocacy, violates the Plaintiffs' right to engage in anonymous speech under the First and Fourteenth Amendments;
- d. Declare that 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-3, to the extent that it compels in-adonor disclosure for issue advocacy, violates the Plaintiffs' right against government compelled speech and government compelled disclosure of association;
- e. Enjoin the Board from enforcing 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-1 against Plaintiffs and other organizations that engage solely in issue advocacy;
- f. Enjoin the Board from enforcing 17 R.I.G.L. 25.3-3 against Plaintiffs and other organizations when they sponsor issue advocacy;
- g. Award Plaintiffs their costs and attorneys' fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988; and
- h. Award any further relief to which Plaintiffs may be entitled.

1 (VIA VIDEO CONFERENCE)

2 21 JULY 2020

3 THE COURT: Good morning. We're on the record
4 in the Gaspee Project and Illinois Opportunity Project
5 vs. Diane C. Mederos, et al. And that is civil action
6 19-609. I'm going to ask that counsel identify 7 themselves for the record, first on behalf of the 8 plaintiffs, and then the defendants. And then if you
9 could just let me -- identify who will be speaking for 10 each.

11 THE CLERK: Judge, can I cut in for one second?

12 THE COURT: Sure.

13 THE CLERK: We're having a problem recording so 14 I think we have to call IT because Lisa won't have a 15 recording. One second.

16 THE COURT: Okay. So we're going to be even a 17 little more delayed. I really do apologize. I hope
18 everybody's patient and well today.

19 Carrie, let me know when you're all set, okay?

20 THE CLERK: We did have it recording on Wendy's
21 computer, but now it's not.

22 (Brief pause)

23 THE COURT: All right. Thank you, everyone, for 24 your patience. I apologize that we're getting under 25 way about 15 minutes late. That's not our norm,

1 although technical difficulties usually cost me a few
2 minutes.

3 So we are on the record, again, in the Gaspee
4 Project and Illinois Opportunity Project vs. Diane
5 Mederos, et al. And it's civil action 19-609. Again,
6 I will ask the parties for the plaintiff and then the 7 defendant to identify themselves. And if you could 8 just identify who will be speaking on behalf of each
9 party, I would appreciate that. Thank you.

10 MR. SUHR: Good morning, your Honor.

11 THE COURT: Good morning.

12 MR. SUHR: Daniel Suhr, S-u-h-r. I'm the lead 13 counsel for the plaintiffs. And I am here with my 14 excellent local counsel, Joe Larisa.

15 THE COURT: Good morning, Mr. Suhr and Mr.
16 Larisa.

17 MS. SADECK: Good morning, your Honor. Special 18 Assistant Attorney General Katherine Sadeck. I'll be 19 arguing for the defendants. And also here today is 20 Keith Hoffmann from our office and attorney Ray 21 Marcaccio.

22 THE COURT: Good morning, Ms. Sadeck, Mr.
23 Hoffmann and Mr. Marcaccio.

24 MR. MARCACCIO: Good morning, your Honor.

25 THE COURT: Good morning. So a couple of things

1 before we get started. I'm sure you're all used to 2 Zoom. We do have a court reporter on the line, and she 3 is trying to take everything down for the record, so
4 speak slowly, speak clearly and speak for the record.
5 I have a tendency to just interrupt without saying your 6 name, and I'm going to try to not interrupt and also 7 try to be a little more directed in my comments so the 8 record is a little clearer. But it's your record, so 9 I'd like us to try to, you know, go as slowly as we 10 can.

11 We are here today on the defendants' motion to 12 dismiss -- and I believe that is ECF number 22 -- and 13 then the plaintiffs' opposition to the motion to 14 dismiss which is at ECF-23. And then the defendants
15 filed a reply memorandum at ECF number 26. So since 16 this is the defendants' motion, Ms. Sadeck, I will hear 17 from you. Thank you.

18 MS. SADECK: Thank you, your Honor.

19 THE COURT: You're welcome.

20 MS. SADECK: So at first glance I think this 21 case can come off as a bit complicated, but when the 22 rhetoric is peeled away and the underlying case law is 23 examined, I think it actually becomes quite apparent.

24 Your Honor, the plaintiffs' position is based on 25 inapplicable cases that don't pertain to the subject

1 matter at hand. The defendants' position is supported
2 by directly on-point recent precedent from the United
3 States Supreme Court and the First Circuit upholding
4 the social laws just like the ones at issue in this 5 case.

6 (Brief pause)

7 MS. SADECK: In particular, the First Circuit's
8 2011 decision in NOM vs. McKee is directly on point,
9 and it provides a roadmap in a lot of ways for this 10 case. And it also makes clear that the First Circuit
11 has already expressly considered and rejected the same
12 arguments that plaintiffs present to this Court today.
13 What I'd like to do is briefly talk about how exact 14 scrutiny is a relevant standard of review and what that 15 means, and then apply that to the provisions that are 16 being challenged in this case.

17 So to start with, the plaintiffs urge this Court
18 to apply the higher strict scrutiny standard of review, 19 but the First Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court have 20 expressly held that the lower exacting scrutiny
21 standard of review is the applicable one in cases like 22 this.

23 Where a strict scrutiny would require a 24 compelling government interest and narrow tailoring and 25 least restrictive means, the courts have found that the

1 lower exacting scrutiny standard, which only requires
2 an important government interest that be substantially
3 related to the law, is the one that applies. The First 4 Circuit recognized this in the 2011 McKee decision when 5 the Court held that the Supreme Court in its First 6 Amendment decision distinguished between laws that 7 restrict the amount you can contribute and laws that 8 simply require you to disclose information about who is 9 speaking about political issues.

10 And the Supreme Court in the First Circuit in 11 McKee were very clear that that latter type of 12 disclosure law, the type that's at issue in this case, 13 is less restrictive and, as a result, it's subjected to 14 a lower level of scrutiny, exacting scrutiny. And for 15 that reason, McKee says disclosure requirements have 16 not been subjected to strict scrutiny but rather 17 exacting scrutiny. And plaintiffs essentially
18 acknowledge this in Footnote 3 of their brief.

19 Another part of the framework that's relevant
20 here is that the Rhode Island Federal District Court
21 has previously recognized that all laws regularly
22 enacted by the Rhode Island legislature, which includes 23 these laws, come to the Court with a presumption of 24 constitutionality. So against that framework, we now
25 look at the provisions that are at issue in this case.

1 Plaintiffs' lawsuit challenges commonsense provisions
2 in Rhode Island's election law framework that we
3 require disclosure of certain limited information
4 regarding certain expenditures of over a thousand
5 dollars. To even be impacted by these laws, you'd have 6 to spend over a thousand dollars. You have to 7 communicate through certain identified media. You have 8 to expressly advocate about a candidate or referenda or 9 identify a candidate or referenda in close proximity to 10 an election in a communication that reaches over 2,000
11 people.

12 Additionally, you can opt out. If you don't 13 want your donation being used for these types of 14 expenditures, you can opt out and then not be subject
15 to these disclosure requirements. There are also other 16 exemptions such as for communications to members of an 17 organization. The First Circuit and other courts have 18 broadly upheld these type of commonsense disclosure
19 laws which subjected to exacting scrutiny.

20 So if we look first at the first exacting
21 scrutiny factor, which is whether there is an important
22 government interest, well, here, the First Circuit in 23 McKee has already done the work for us. In that case,
24 the First Circuit identified at least two important
25 government interests that apply. First, McKee

1 recognized a government interest in disseminating
2 information about the electoral process so that 3 citizens can make informed choices and know where 4 political campaign money comes from and how it is 5 spent. McKee also identified a second related interest
6 which derives from the Supreme Court Citizens United
7 case, an interest in identifying the speakers behind
8 politically oriented messages.

9 The court said disclosing the identity and 10 constituency of a speaker engaged in political speech 11 enables the electorate to make informed decisions and 12 give proper weight to different speakers and messages.
13 So in this regard, McKee is directly on point, and it
14 makes clear that Rhode Island has important government 15 interests related to informing voters about the 16 individuals and interests behind election-related 17 disclosures. And these interests are applicable not 18 just to communications about candidates, but also 19 referenda. In either case, the interest in identifying 20 speakers behind, as the court put it, politically 21 oriented messages, applies. So now we can turn to the 22 second exacting scrutiny factor which requires a
23 substantial relation between those important interests
24 and the challenge provisions.

25 With regard to the main statute that the court

1 in McKee examined, that applied even more broadly than 2 the Rhode Island statute. It covered expenditures over 3 $100 as opposed to the thousand dollars here. And the 4 First Circuit held that this factor, this second 5 substantial relationship factor, was satisfied because 6 the modest amount of information requested is not 7 unduly burdensome and ties directly and closely to the 8 important government interests.

9 In the 2000 Daggett case, which is another First 10 Circuit case, the court again found a substantial
11 relation between reporting requirements and government
12 interests. In McKee, the First Circuit was clear that 13 this standard, this factor, is that not only with 14 regard to independent expenditures but also electionary
15 communication because disclosure requirements bear a 16 substantial relationship to the public's interest in 17 knowing who is speaking about a candidate shortly
18 before an election, even if the ad does not expressly 19 advocate for or against that candidate.

20 The Citizens United decision probably is most 21 widely known for holding that contribution limits on 22 corporations are unconstitutional. But the court in 23 that case also made very important statements about the 24 importance of disclosure requirements and how those 25 disclosure requirements are so important in helping

1 citizens in this modern age more than ever understand
2 who is speaking about political issues. Citizens can 3 properly evaluate the message including the 4 trustworthiness and the biases of the speaker.

5 To the extent that the plaintiffs here argue
6 that the disclosure requirements will somehow harm them
7 or subject their members to harassment, they've only 8 offered the most generalized conclusory allegations in 9 that regard and not even any specific allegations about 10 concerns or incidence experience by their own members.

11 THE COURT: Ms. Sadeck, I don't want to derail
12 you here, but I want to ask you about that.

13 Are there any cases where the motion-to-dismiss
14 standard has been applied when a party has alleged, you 15 know, potential harm to the speakers? So in other 16 words, can you address the fact that the plaintiffs 17 have made this allegation and we are at a
18 motion-to-dismiss standard.

19 MS. SADECK: Sure, your Honor. So the 20 allegations in the complaint are general -- they talk 21 about a generalized concern -- but it's not specific.
22 There are no specific factual allegations about members
23 of these organizations, the Gaspee Project, the 24 Illinois Opportunity Project, experiencing harassment, 25 retaliation or anything like that.

1 And the United States Supreme Court in Citizens
2 United was very, very clear regarding the extremely 3 high standard of specific allegations that are 4 necessary for harm to be a consideration. And I think
5 it's very clear that the NAACP case regarding the 6 members of the NAACP in 1950s Alabama and the very real
7 and present threat that they faced by their members
8 being disclosed is a very unique circumstance. And in 9 Citizens United, the Court considered the same kinds of 10 things that are alleged in this complaint. Now,
11 Citizens United was not in a motion-to-dismiss 12 standard, but we're really in the same position in the 13 sense that in a motion-to-dismiss standard we accept 14 the allegations as true.

15 So even accepting as true the allegations in the 16 complaint, even accepting those type of more 17 generalized allegations of harm as true, we're in the 18 same situation as Citizens United which considered the 19 same level of generalized allegation. The plaintiffs 20 in Citizens United made the general argument that 21 disclosure requirements can kill those donations to an 22 organization by exposing donors to retaliation.

23 THE COURT: And I don't want to interrupt again, 24 Ms. Sadeck, because I try not to do this, but I just 25 want to kind of hone in on this point because the NAACP

1 case is still good law. So my question is sort of at a
2 motion-to-dismiss level standard, taking all
3 allegations as alleged by the plaintiffs, is there a
4 point where -- is this a bright line or is it a sliding
5 scale? Because clearly what the NAACP was alleging in 6 1958, I believe, or 1950, whatever it was, was a very 7 extreme sort of backlash.

8 But taking the allegations as pled, is there a 9 point where the Court has to say that at least 10 discovery needs to proceed on that issue or are we at a 11 point where just a conclusory allegation is not enough?

12 MS. SADECK: We're at a point where we take the 13 complaint as it is, and we take the allegations in the 14 complaint as it is. And we're assuming that they're 15 all true. What the state's position is, is even giving 16 them the credit, we're going to assume that all the 17 allegations in the complaint are true, that's what we 18 do under the 12(b)(6) standard, even doing that, we're 19 still in the same position as the court was in Citizens
20 United. The nature of the allegations in the complaint 21 are general, just like the ones that were before the 22 court in Citizens United.

23 The plaintiff here hasn't alleged member Joe 24 Smith was told he'd be fired from his job if he did
25 this. They haven't alleged we've received 50 emails

1 from our members that if we have to disclose, we're not
2 going to donate anymore. We don't have anything
3 approaching that kind of specific allegation of harm.

4 Instead, we have the exact same kinds of 5 allegations of harm that the court in Citizens United 6 considered. I mean, it wasn't minimal. In Citizens
7 United, the court was presented with arguments --
8 here's a quote -- "that recent events in which donors
9 to certain causes were blacklisted, threatened or 10 otherwise targeted for retaliation."

11 That's very familiar because that's the same 12 type of arguments that the plaintiffs in this case are 13 presenting. They're talking about cases where someone 14 took down confederate monuments and was threatened or 15 someone supported gay marriage and was threatened with 16 retaliation. They talk about all these other instances 17 where individuals have experienced potential threats of 18 reprisal.

19 And that's the same thing that the Citizens
20 United court considered, but the court found that the 21 plaintiffs in that case had offered no evidence that 22 its members may face similar threats or reprisals. So 23 the court was very clear that even those same types of 24 allegations that are in the complaint, that we assume 25 were true, don't rise to the level of specificity

1 necessary to establish the kind of harm that would come
2 even close to equating to the NAACP case and the 3 situation where the harm is very real and present
4 danger.

5 And we just don't have those allegations here.
6 Even crediting the allegations, they don't rise to that 7 level. Even if we assume that discovery -- all of the 8 allegations in the complaint as true, it still wouldn't 9 rise to that level.

10 The other factor is that this is brought as a 11 facial challenge. We noticed that in our motion to 12 dismiss and the plaintiffs haven't disagreed. So under 13 a facial challenge standard, the plaintiffs have to 14 show that there's no constitutionally appropriate 15 application of this statute. Even, for instance, if 16 there were an organization or two to whom application
17 of this statute might be unconstitutional, that doesn't 18 cut it. They would have to show that it's 19 unconstitutional across the board when applied, and 20 because they sought release not just for themselves but 21 for other organizations, that's the relevant standard
22 and they can't meet that standard here.

23 The plaintiffs have also alleged that the 24 statutory provisions in this case requiring that the 25 top five donors be listed on communications constitutes

1 compelled speech. That's another way that they try to 2 differentiate the precedent. As an initial matter,
3 that provision only applies in the communications made
4 by certain tax-exempt entities. And, again, McKee
5 applies here. McKee and other courts have observed
6 that there can be confusion caused by ambiguous entity
7 names that don't really make clear who is speaking.
8 And McKee in the First Circuit applied exacting
9 scrutiny to disclaimer requirements and determined that 10 there was a substantial relationship between the 11 government's important interests and a law requiring 12 disclaimer of the persons who are speaking or financing
13 the communication. And in that case, the court said
14 that the disclaimer and attribution requirements are, 15 on their face, unquestionably constitutional. And that 16 applies here too.

17 Plaintiffs try to escape this precedent by 18 saying that their case is analogous to the National 19 Institute of Family and Life Advocates case. In that 20 case, the court struck down a law that required a 21 pregnancy clinic to post a message that was directly
22 contrary to that clinic's own belief systems. The law
23 required a pro-life clinic to post a message about 24 abortion resources.

25 The disconnect between that case and this case

1 is obvious. Here, the disclaimer requirement is only a
2 content-neutral requirement to identify the speaker,
3 not a requirement to spread a substantive message that 4 is against the entity's own beliefs.

5 And multiple courts have rejected the argument
6 that plaintiffs are making that this equates to 7 compelled speech. In Citizens United vs. Schneiderman,
8 which was a Second Circuit 2018 case, the court noted
9 that disclosure requirements are not inherently content
10 based. Massachusetts federal court, faced with a 11 similar top five disclosure provision, held that that 12 pregnancy clinic case that plaintiffs rely on does not 13 command a different result given the content-neutral 14 nature of the disclaimer requirement in this case and 15 the minimal burden placed on plaintiffs' speech.
16 That's the Mass. Fiscal Alliance vs. Sullivan case
17 cited in the brief.

18 Seemingly recognizing that the precedent is 19 entirely against them, the plaintiffs try to say their 20 case is different because they wish to engage in issue
21 advocacy rather than express advocacy without expressly 22 advocating for or against a certain candidate or 23 referenda. And at first the rhetoric of that argument
24 has some appeal, but the exact same argument was 25 already before the United States Supreme Court and the

1 First Circuit and both soundly rejected.

2 In the First Circuit in the McKee decision, the 3 First Circuit noted that fundamentally the Supreme 4 Court has explicitly rejected an attempt to import the 5 distinction between issue and express advocacy into the 6 consideration of disclosure requirements. The court
7 went on to similarly say, "We find it reasonably clear,
8 in light of Citizens United, that the distinction
9 between issue discussion and express advocacy has no 10 place in First Amendment review of these sorts of 11 disclosure-oriented laws."

12 The 2011 Daluz case, decided the same day as the 13 McKee case, it examined Rhode Island's disclosure laws, 14 held likewise and said that the contention that 15 disclosure laws must be limited to regulation of 16 express advocacy is rejected. The D.C. District Court
17 in a decision that was summarily affirmed by the United 18 States Supreme Court, stated that the Supreme Court in 19 every court of appeals to consider the question have 20 already largely, if not completely, closed the door to 21 the argument that the constitutionality of a disclosure
22 provision turns on the content of the advocacy
23 accompanying explicit reference to an electoral 24 candidate.

25 The court found that the United States Supreme

1 Court had rejected the notion that the First Amendment
2 requires Congress to treat so-called issue advocacy
3 differently from express advocacy. The First Circuit
4 in these other federal courts could not have been 5 clearer in rejecting the very same argument that the 6 plaintiffs base their case on, and accepting 7 plaintiffs' argument would not only run afoul of this 8 precedent, it would also create a gaping loophole in 9 Rhode Island's disclosure laws.

10 If we take, for example, the Gaspee Project,
11 they say that they want to spend over a thousand 12 dollars sending out mailers to thousands of Rhode 13 Islanders in close proximity to election telling them
14 that if they vote yes on a certain referenda, their 15 taxes will go up. And they say, well, we're not 16 telling them to vote no; we're just going to tell them
17 that their taxes are going to go up if they vote yes.

18 Well, Rhode Island disclosure laws and the 19 relevant court precedent I just discussed recognized
20 this for what it is; it's an electioneering
21 communication. And plaintiffs' complaint at paragraph
22 5 admits as much. They say that plaintiffs, quote,
23 "intend to engage in issue advocacy in Rhode Island
24 concerning referenda and legislators up for votes in 25 2020."

1 It's obvious that plaintiffs are trying to speak
2 about matters that are, quote, "up for votes" and are 3 seeking to spread a message to voters about election
4 issues. The loophole that plaintiffs advocate for 5 would allow the rule to be swallowed up and would 6 render disclosure laws meaningless. Its nameless,
7 faceless entities could avoid disclosure laws simply by 8 saying here are all the bad things that are going to 9 happen if you vote yes, but we're not going to tell you
10 to vote no. That puts form over substance, and the 11 courts have clearly and consistently rejected that.

12 The applicable case law in this disclosure 13 context is all against the plaintiffs' position, and 14 that leaves them relying on inapplicable cases; namely, 15 the NAACP case and the McIntyre case. They make very 16 clear on page 24 of their brief that their case is 17 basically resting entirely on these two cases, neither 18 of which pertain to disclosure laws.

19 The NAACP case sought disclosure of a membership
20 list. Let's be clear, nothing in Rhode Island's laws
21 requires disclosure of a membership list. Disclosure
22 is only triggered by expenditures over a thousand 23 dollars that meet the other requirements of the 24 statute. And there's an opt-out provision. So members 25 who wish to donate, but not be subject to the

1 disclosure laws, can do so.

2 And as I already discussed, there's no specific
3 allegations of harm here. Try as they might to equate
4 their position to that of NAACP members in Alabama in 5 the 1950s, there are no factual allegations pled that 6 would even come close to that level of harm.

7 The McIntyre case is just as inapplicable. It
8 pertained to a woman who, as the plaintiffs put it,
9 showed up in a meeting with a bunch of flyers to hand
10 out to her neighbors. That case did not pertain to 11 election disclosure laws; it was completely different.

12 Here, the laws at issue require a 13 thousand-dollar threshold and other requirements to be 14 met. The Blakeslee case relied upon by plaintiffs,
15 Rhode Island District Court case in 2014, is the same 16 as the McIntyre case and it too does not apply to 17 disclosure laws.

18 Your Honor's question earlier asked about the 19 appropriateness of resolving this on a 20 motion-to-dismiss level. And the Supreme Court spoke 21 about that in the case of Neitzke vs. Williams, 490
22 U.S. 319. And in that case, the court said that Rule 23 12(b)(6) authorizes a court to dismiss a claim on the 24 basis of dispositive issue of law.

25 The court went on to say, "This procedure,

1 operating on the assumption that the factual
2 allegations in the complaint are true, streamlined
3 litigation by dispensing with needless discovery and 4 fact-finding. If, as a matter of law, it is clear that 5 no relief could be granted under any set of facts that 6 could be proved consistent with the allegations, a 7 claim must be dismissed without regard to whether it's 8 based on outlandish legal theory or on a close 9 unavailing one."

10 This case fits neatly within that framework.
11 Plaintiffs are bringing a facial challenge. They have 12 not identified any need for discovery and there is 13 none. Even if accepting the plaintiffs' factual
14 allegations are true, as a matter of law, their entire 15 case is based on legal arguments that the First Circuit
16 has already rejected. And for that reason, dismissal
17 is appropriate on a motion-to-dismiss standard.

18 I'd be happy to answer any other questions the 19 Court has.

20 THE COURT: Thank you, Ms. Sadeck. I don't have 21 any at this time. I'm going to ask attorney Suhr to 22 argue, but I would ask you to address first initially 23 one thing.

24 Is this a facial challenge and has the plaintiff
25 conceded that?

1 MR. SUHR: It is a facial challenge, your Honor,
2 to the extent that we are seeking relief for more than 3 just ourselves. I think Doe vs. Reed has a useful
4 paragraph on this concept.

5 THE COURT: Right.

6 MR. SUHR: Yes.

7 THE COURT: Okay. Let me ask you in that 8 framework, assuming that the framework applies, are 9 there any federal cases where a disclosure and 10 disclaimer law was found unconstitutional under 11 exacting scrutiny or are you arguing that we're looking 12 at a heightened scrutiny?

13 MR. SUHR: So for the first two claims, I think 14 we recognize that McKee compels exacting scrutiny. And 15 we believe for the third claim, strict scrutiny is the 16 appropriate standard.

17 THE COURT: Right. I'll let you argue. I just 18 want you to know that those are the questions that I
19 have in my mind as you are arguing. Thank you.

20 MR. SUHR: Thank you, ma'am.

21 As you're obviously aware, we're at a motion to 22 dismiss and so I guess I would phrase the standard
23 slightly differently. I think the First Circuit case
24 we cited in our brief used the phrase "frame a viable
25 legal theory" as the burden that we have or cognizable

1 legal theory. I feel like we've at least met that 2 standard that for now you only need to
3 conclude -- rather, for now to conclude that the motion
4 should be granted, that our activities are clearly not 5 protected.

6 So I think it's important to start, your Honor,
7 by remembering we have three separate claims.
8 Defendants' strategy here has been to sort of lump them
9 all together, say that they are controlled by McKee and 10 move on, but we have three separate claims with three 11 separate legal theories. And though McKee may provide 12 some guidance, if you read McKee, you will find nowhere
13 in it any discussion of McIntyre or NAACP or NIFLA, 14 because that case was based on an overbreadth and 15 vagueness challenge. They were simply different legal 16 theories.

17 So the holdings in McKee are certainly 18 applicable, for instance, on the standard of review;
19 nonetheless, the issues that we're bringing forward
20 here are new issues that call for your Honor's
21 attention.

22 So the first is the donor disclosure claim which 23 I'll call the NAACP claim which, as your Honor has 24 noted, is still good law and its holding is very clear.
25 Privacy in association for speech is important and the

1 state cannot lightly invade it. I'll focus on just 2 responding to my colleague's points here.

3 The reason we only had generalized allegations
4 as to the harm to our clients is because our clients'
5 donors are currently private. This is the inherent 6 problem in the state's argument is that no group could 7 ever succeed if it has -- the NAACP couldn't have 8 necessarily succeeded because they couldn't say, well,
9 you know, this person is a member of ours and they have 10 been targeted without acknowledging that that person 11 was a member. And the whole point is to preserve the 12 member's privacy.

13 So I would point you to Justice Alito's
14 concurrence in Doe vs. Reed which is a great maybe two 15 paragraphs where he talked about the standard for new 16 organizations that are first entering the public square
17 in this way, what standard should be applied. And 18 there the answer is that you can look to the 19 experiences of other similar groups and what their 20 members have experienced in order to prove your own
21 concern or fear. And so I think there, at least as you 22 noted at the motion-to-dismiss stage, we certainly 23 deserve an opportunity to show that similar 24 organizations like ours have experienced similar 25 responses.

1 THE COURT: So without -- I don't want to derail
2 you -- I hated it when judges did that to me and then I
3 lost my place -- but I just want to focus you a little 4 bit in on that. What do you have to allege in a
5 complaint, though? Is it not available to you to make 6 out specific allegations about similar organizations
7 that have experienced and similar individuals who are 8 members of similar organizations who have experienced
9 this kind of backlash?

10 I think recognizing that NAACP is still good
11 law, we also need to recognize the climate in which it 12 occurred and the timing in which it occurred. And 13 there was some good evidence of backlash against 14 members of not only their organization but similar 15 organizations. So I'd ask you, why haven't you brought 16 that forth and how would discovery flesh that out?

17 MR. SUHR: Sure.

18 THE COURT: Because -- and maybe I'm just 19 oversimplifying, but I'm looking at it, the Rhode 20 Island Board of Elections isn't going to have the 21 evidence of that, right?

22 MR. SUHR: No. It's our opportunity I think at 23 the summary judgment stage to prove that, including by 24 providing evidence from affidavits from our client.
25 And that's -- you know, I think in the complaint, what

1 we reference is our clients and their organizational 2 leaders who are professionals in the space who have to 3 raise money to sustain their organizations. You know,
4 they allege that they have this legitimate fear based 5 on these experiences.

6 And you're right certainly, your Honor,
7 thankfully, we don't live in an era of burning crosses
8 anymore, but there have been instances since then when 9 organizations have brought forth similar claims that we 10 can look at. So the ACLU, which is certainly a 11 recognized national brand-name organization, has 12 brought donor privacy claims based on the experiences
13 of its members working on controversial issues. The 14 Black Panther party had a good case in the D.C. circuit
15 on this point.

16 THE COURT: Have any of the courts -- have any 17 federal cases since Citizens United struck down
18 disclosure and disclaimer laws under exacting scrutiny?

19 MR. SUHR: Yes, your Honor, two. One is 20 Americans for Prosperity vs. Holden. It's a New Jersey
21 case. There, admittedly, the disclosure was far
22 broader; it applied to issue advocacy at any time. It
23 wasn't specific to the electoral time period.

24 But Judge Martinotti in that case has a great 25 final two pages in his opinion where he talks about --

1 THE COURT: Do you have the cite?

2 MR. SUHR: I'll file a notice of supplemental
3 authority, your Honor.

4 THE COURT: Thank you.

5 MR. SUHR: Judge Martinotti has a great section 6 for about two pages at the end where he talks about the 7 cancel culture that we live in and the experience of 8 people. And then there's also a case, Citizens Union, 9 not Citizens United, which is a conservative group, but 10 Citizens Union, which is actually a Ralph Nader group.
11 We'll also submit the supplemental authority, your 12 Honor, which was, again, decided within the last year.

13 And then third, there was a case, again, not 14 specifically in the electoral context, it was a 15 contract disclosure case, but from the Southern 16 District of California, L.A., had passed a law saying 17 that you had to disclose if you were a member of the 18 NRA in order to qualify for a city contract. And the 19 court there recognized that being an NRA member is a 20 controversial thing in our society and that city
21 contractors shouldn't have to disclose that in order to 22 -- it was an unconstitutional condition. So I'll 23 submit those cases, your Honor. But I think that 24 probably covers the waterfront on our first point.

25 Again, I really think Justice Alito's

1 concurrence in Doe vs. Reed is a great starting point
2 on this claim because he talks a lot about the 3 harassment, especially the internet, and the way in 4 which the internet has just so changed our society. It
5 struck me, your Honor, that Illinois Opportunity
6 Project is here in Rhode Island and we're concerned
7 about this, but the reality for my client is if they 8 engage in this advocacy in Rhode Island like they plan
9 to, they may have donors in Illinois or elsewhere in 10 the country who are going to be disclosed because of 11 this law. And that's just on the internet. And so a 12 fight that they might be fighting in one state all of a 13 sudden becomes information that's available in a fight
14 in a different state, so anyway that's our first claim.

15 Our second claim is the disclosure claim, what 16 I'll call the McIntyre claim. The first question I 17 think you have to confront is whether McIntyre is still 18 good law. Defendants have adduced no evidence that the 19 Supreme Court has overruled it. Indeed, they cannot.
20 The Supreme Court has not. All the state can say is 21 that it is hard to reconcile with Citizens United.

22 The Supreme Court did not think that Citizens
23 United overruled McIntyre because only six months later
24 in Doe vs. Reed, which is a case I have mentioned 25 several times already, there is extensive discussion of

1 McIntyre in Justice Stevens' concurrence, Justice
2 Alito's concurrence and Judge Thomas's dissent all
3 which came out after Citizens United. So I think the 4 case is still good law. And knowing that it is, the 5 question is how does it apply?

6 And I think here the Seventh Circuit has charted
7 the way in the Wisconsin Right to Life vs. Barland
8 case, which is a very long case which I apologize, but 9 if you turn to the pages that we cite in particular,
10 Judge Sykes has a really strong discussion of the 11 importance of grassroots organizations in our public
12 square and the role that they play. And the fact that 13 when they speak up on issues, especially when people 14 are paying attention to issues, which is close to an 15 election, that it's not constitutional to just impose
16 on them this political committee status that the state
17 seeks to impose.

18 Our third claim, your Honor, is the compelled 19 speech claim, what I'll call the NIFLA claim. And the 20 state wants you to see this as a disclaimer requirement
21 or disclosure requirement, but it's really not. A 22 disclosure requirement in the vein of Citizens United 23 or Buckley vs. Valeo, right, where we really start 24 from, is that you have to fill out a form, you have to 25 send it to defendants, the board, and they'll post it

1 on the website. And that is one thing and it is 2 disclosure and it is a burden on speech, but it is not 3 speech in and of itself.

4 What this provision of the law requires is 5 speech; it is compelled speech. In order to enter the 6 public square, in order to say what you want to say,
7 you also have to say what the state wants you to say.

8 THE COURT: But it's not content based, right?
9 It's content neutral.

10 MR. SUHR: It is content neutral, but it is 11 content altering, which is the phrase the Court uses in 12 NIFLA. It applies to everybody regardless of what 13 issue you want to talk about, but it changes what you
14 say when you talk about your issue. So it is content 15 altering -- again, that's the phrase in NIFLA -- and 16 because of that, it is subject to strict scrutiny.

17 It's the same sort of -- I think the Supreme 18 Court in NIFLA arrives at strict scrutiny by saying
19 content altering and content based are similar and so 20 they take Reed vs. Town of Gilbert, which is the 21 content-based case, and say, okay, content-altering
22 laws, also it makes sense to apply the same standard.

23 But it is content altering and, you know, my 24 colleague on the other side tried to distinguish NIFLA
25 by saying the pro-life crisis pregnancy centers really

1 didn't want to say what the state wanted them to say.
2 And my only answer to that is my clients really don't
3 want to say what the state wants them to say.

4 THE COURT: Isn't it different when you're 5 talking about a clinic that would be forced to put 6 information out there that is completely in opposition
7 to its belief system as opposed to disclosure law that 8 requires you to say, hey, these are the people who are 9 providing the most or the top five, you know, amounts
10 of money for our issue campaign or our candidate
11 campaign?

12 MR. SUHR: I would say my clients are just as 13 committed to privacy as the pro-life pregnancy centers
14 are committed to being pro-life.

15 THE COURT: But this isn't -- so your issue
16 isn't a private -- you're not arguing privacy -- that 17 electioneering around privacy issues is the issues.

18 MR. SUHR: No.

19 THE COURT: So this is a slightly
20 different -- it's not requiring you just to -- or 21 requiring people to say here's the opposing viewpoints, 22 right?

23 MR. SUHR: That's true.

24 THE COURT: And NIFLA was.

25 MR. SUHR: It is not a fairness doctrine sort of

1 requirement. So I would agree with you, your Honor,
2 that NIFLA is perhaps a more obvious infringement, but 3 I think if you read the holding in NIFLA, it is 4 absolutely on point. Though the court is certainly 5 sympathetic to the pro-life center's unwillingness to 6 say it, and I think it's skeptical of the state's 7 motives in making them say it, nevertheless, the 8 holding in the case is the reason the state can't make 9 them say it is because it's altering their speech and 10 making them say something they don't want to say.

11 And that is equal issue for my clients; that it 12 is forcing them to alter the content of their 13 communication and say something they don't want to say.
14 For that reason, it's subject to strict scrutiny.

15 Now, your Honor still might say, well, okay, in 16 NIFLA the state's interests were different and the 17 tailoring was different, whereas in this case, you 18 know, the state's interests are different and the 19 tailoring is different. But I think the strict 20 scrutiny rule still applied.

21 Specifically, on the tailoring question, your 22 Honor, even if you conclude that the exacting scrutiny
23 is met by the state's informational interests, I think 24 it's much harder to say that strict scrutiny is met by 25 the state's informational interests. And that's

1 because the court in a number of the campaign finance
2 cases the state has cited has said preventing 3 corruption? That's compelling, that's important.

4 That's not an interest here. There are no
5 corruption concerns that the state has brought forward.
6 It's only the informational interests which the court
7 has always sort of tagged on at the end of the interest
8 that justify these disclosure laws because it's the 9 least powerful of the state's interests. So even if it
10 does justify the first two, I really do think you have 11 to look at the third one differently.

12 And the final thing I'll say on this third 13 claim, your Honor, is just that the state is certainly 14 right; Massachusetts Fiscal Alliance came out one way, 15 which is the district court case there. I would just 16 point out that I've got a district court case in 17 California Republican Party that came out the other 18 way.

19 THE COURT: Well, we're First Circuit
20 jurisdiction, so don't I need to look at what the First 21 Circuit says with a little closer eye than, say, the 22 Ninth Circuit?

23 MR. SUHR: Certainly so. But when we have two 24 district court opinions, I really don't know what to 25 say other than you have to read NIFLA.

1 THE COURT: Is the California case still good
2 law?

3 MR. SUHR: It's a district court decision. It
4 was never vacated or changed on appeal. I think the 5 case actually just kind of died. The election happened
6 and so the case sort of went away.

7 THE COURT: Okay.

8 MR. SUHR: Those are my three claims, your 9 Honor. I think, in closing, perhaps just for the 10 benefit of my clients or any press that are listening, 11 this case is about the fundamental right of every 12 citizen to band together with others who share his or 13 her beliefs, to speak out together in a public square 14 on issues of importance for them while not having to 15 register with the government, hand over their names and 16 home addresses of all their supporters for the world to 17 find on the internet and then say things they don't 18 want to say because the government makes them say it.
19 The First Amendment protects my clients from these 20 incredibly broad, invasive mandates. Thank you, your 21 Honor.

22 THE COURT: Well, let me just ask you a 23 question.

24 MR. SUHR: Of course.

25 THE COURT: Because your summary there at the

1 end, you say, you know, to band together and not 2 disclose. There are opt-out provisions in the law, and 3 it's only within a certain time frame and it is only 4 with certain electioneering kind of speech; isn't that 5 correct?

6 MR. SUHR: Yes, ma'am. I think that all goes to 7 the tailoring question.

8 THE COURT: I understand that, but at the end
9 you said, you know, that this impacts their right to 10 band together. It doesn't do any of those things;
11 isn't that correct?

12 MR. SUHR: So I would say it does affect their 13 right to band together privately.

14 THE COURT: They can band together privately and 15 all donate $999 or all opt out of whatever issue is 16 less than that, can't they, without anybody ever
17 knowing about it?

18 MR. SUHR: Yes, ma'am, that is true.

19 THE COURT: It may impact it, but it's not 20 completely disrupting it. So I just want to be pretty 21 clear for the record.

22 MR. SUHR: Fair enough, ma'am.

23 THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

24 Is there anything else, Ms. Sadeck, you'd like 25 to respond to?

1 MS. SADECK: Yes, your Honor. If I can just
2 quickly respond to just a few points?

3 THE COURT: Sure.

4 MS. SADECK: One is regarding the -- plaintiff
5 makes the argument, essentially, that all we have to do
6 to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) is not present an outlandish
7 argument and because it's a coherent argument, that 8 that gets past the gate. I think the Supreme Court
9 case I cited was very clear on rejecting that position
10 and saying that it really doesn't matter if it's an 11 outlandish argument or a close argument that just 12 misses. The bottom line is it's a legal argument that 13 fails as a matter of law. And in that case, dismissal
14 is appropriate under 12(b)(6).

15 In regard to the allegations about donor
16 concerns, there's really two issues there and I think
17 those issues I raised before, and I'll just follow up
18 on those now based on what plaintiffs' counsel said.
19 First, is that regarding concerns of harm, discovery
20 would not help here. Under Twombly, you need to plead 21 allegations that would survive a motion to dismiss and 22 that state a claim. And the allegations pled in the 23 complaint are extremely general. Plaintiffs are 24 concerned, they plead, that compelled disclosure could 25 lead to substantial personal and economic

1 repercussions, but then the complaint goes on to say
2 that this is based on the fact that across the country
3 individual and corporate donors to other political 4 candidates and issues have been subject to harassment.
5 That's the exact same situation as Citizens United 6 where the court was presented with arguments that,
7 well, we feel we're going to be reprised against 8 because others have been reprised against. Even 9 accepting that allegation as true, Citizens United said
10 that's not enough, that's not NAACP.

11 THE COURT: I guess my question is, somewhere
12 between NAACP and Citizens United there is some sort of 13 alliance, right? And I think we can acknowledge that 14 the climate has changed even since Citizens United. I 15 think that's what Mr. Suhr is saying.

16 So I guess my question is: Do we get to 17 discovery in order to allow them to present information
18 saying here's how people with similar views, with 19 similar disclosure laws in similar situations, have 20 been retaliated against, or do we allow the plaintiffs 21 an opportunity to supplement by affidavit and then 22 convert the standard to a summary judgment standard?

23 I'm unclear of where along that continuum this 24 case falls. I'm just interested in your opinion and 25 also Mr. Suhr's.

1 MS. SADECK: Sure, your Honor. I think there's 2 two points there. And the first point, which I think
3 is the most dispositive one, is that plaintiffs have 4 acknowledged that this is a facial challenge so it,
5 frankly, doesn't matter. Even if Gaspee Project had 6 affidavits from a hundred members saying I've been 7 threatened, I've been reprised against, this is a
8 facial challenge. The plaintiffs under a facial 9 challenge have to show that the law is unconstitutional
10 and lacks any plainly legitimate sweep.

11 The Hightower decision, that's the First Circuit
12 decision, 693 F.3d 61, says that to succeed in a facial 13 challenge, you have to show that the law lacks any 14 plainly legitimate sweep. In the Naser Jewelers case,
15 which I believe is cited in our brief, which is 513
16 F.3d 27, says that for a facial challenge, you, the 17 plaintiff, have the burden to show that the law has no
18 constitutional application.

19 So even if, just assuming arguendo, Gaspee
20 Project could come up with a type of level of harm that 21 could bring it into the realm of NAACP, it doesn't 22 matter, that's just them. That doesn't mean that the 23 law lacks any plainly legitimate sweep or that it 24 wouldn't be constitutional to apply the law to 25 everybody else that doesn't have that specific factual

1 scenario.

2 So I think that's the most dispositive answer
3 about why discovery isn't needed and why it doesn't 4 matter; because it's a facial challenge. But even 5 putting that aside, there's the issue about how under 6 Twombly, in order to even open the door to discovery,
7 you need to plead specific facts or at least specific 8 allegations that go beyond the level of being 9 conclusory. And the allegations in the complaint, even 10 accepted as true, are all at that conclusory level of 11 we're afraid we're going to be harmed because other 12 people have been harmed. And that's what Citizens
13 United had before it and said wasn't enough.

14 And, you know, even if plaintiffs didn't want to 15 divulge the names of their members in the complaint,
16 they can even do it as John Doe or some other 17 mechanism. But they haven't done that. To say, oh, 18 we'll provide affidavits down the line, but to not 19 plead that there are factual allegations of specific 20 harm, is insufficient to survive a 12(b)(6) motion.
21 But again, I think just the fact that it's a facial
22 challenge just resolves that issue and shows that it
23 really doesn't matter what these two plaintiffs plead
24 about harm to them because it doesn't show the law
25 lacks a plainly legitimate sweep.

1 Regarding the top five donor provision,
2 plaintiffs rely on a California District Court case.
3 Of course, as your Honor pointed out, the First Circuit
4 law that's directly on point is what's really
5 applicable here and binding. And it's also notable 6 that following the case that plaintiffs rely on,
7 California District Court in Yes on Prop B held that it
8 was okay to require disclosure of donors and recognized
9 that the names of these organizations can oftentimes be 10 very opaque and confusing to voters. And that's why
11 there is a legitimate need to require a disclosure
12 disclaimer of who is actually behind these various ads.

13 And, you know, I think I've already discussed at 14 length the McKee decision. McKee doesn't mention
15 McIntyre -- they're absolutely -- and that's for a 16 reason; because it's a different line of precedent.
17 It's a different circumstance. These are financial 18 disclosure laws. And McKee is the directly on-point
19 precedent for those laws. Thank you, your Honor.

20 THE COURT: Thank you.

21 Mr. Suhr, anything briefly?

22 MR. SUHR: I will say three things, your Honor, 23 very briefly. First, Citizens United was at the 24 summary judgment stage and so I think the standard
25 there is notable.

1 Second, the reason we can't produce an affidavit
2 from, you know, John Doe donor to our organization
3 showing retaliation for being a donor, is because 4 nobody knows they're a donor so they haven't been 5 subject to retaliation for being our donor yet.

6 THE COURT: I think that Ms. Sadeck is arguing
7 that you could show similarly situated people by 8 affidavit.

9 MR. SUHR: We could. That's the opportunity
10 we're seeking is that in similar organizations people
11 had these sorts of experiences.

12 Mostly, though, I want to concentrate on this 13 facial or as-applied question of how to read NAACP.
14 Honestly, your Honor, I don't think the Supreme Court
15 agrees on it, right. I think some people read NAACP
16 and say we have a general disclosure law, but if you
17 can show you'll be subject to retaliation, you can get 18 an as-applied exception. And that's the way Justice
19 Scalia, for instance, reads NAACP throughout his 20 career.

21 Other people read NAACP and say in a free
22 society privacy is the presumption, and the references
23 in NAACP to retaliation illustrate why that privacy is 24 important. But, for instance, Justice Douglas in the 25 Gibson NAACP case -- sorry, I'm throwing out a lot of

1 names -- Justice Douglas says even if there was no
2 retaliation, the state still has to show why it has an 3 entitlement to access the private records of a private 4 organization, why it can force disclosure on a group
5 that doesn't want to be disclosed. So there's this 6 back and forth amongst the Justices about whether NAACP
7 sets a facial rule or if it only requires an as-applied
8 rule.

9 And I think the Justices would say that it's a 10 facial rule, that it just recognizes this broad right
11 of privacy for associations of right, and in our brief
12 we mention the three cases I think that hold that, 13 which are California Bankers, Shelton v. Tucker and 14 Baird v. State Bar, which all recognize in a free 15 society citizens enjoy a right of privacy in their 16 associations. And it's the government's burden to show
17 it needs information, not the individual association's 18 burden to show that it needs privacy.

19 THE COURT: Thank you.

20 MR. SUHR: More homework, I apologize, your 21 Honor.

22 THE COURT: No, that's okay. That's all I do.
23 Nowhere else to go. We will take this under advisement
24 and try to issue an opinion as quickly as we can. I
25 recognize that we are approaching election season.

1 MR. SUHR: If your Honor lets our case proceed,
2 we'll have a preliminary injunction shortly after your 3 ruling that tries to reflect what you've said and show
4 our likelihood of success on the merits.

5 THE COURT: All right. Thank you.

6 MR. SUHR: Thank you, your Honor.

7 MS. SADECK: Thank you, your Honor.

8 THE COURT: Okay.
