STATEMENT OF IDENTITY, INTEREST, AND AUTHORITY TO FILE

Amici are 191 Members of the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate. See Appendix (listing Amici). This Court ordered that amicus briefs may be filed without consent and leave of court. Fed. Cir. Dkt. 53. Amici, which include members on committees with jurisdiction over tariffs and trade, have a strong interest in ensuring that any action by the President complies with the authority delegated to him by Congress. The Constitution confers onto Congress, not the President, the authority to impose tariffs and regulate commerce with foreign nations. When the President wishes to impose tariffs, he must comply with the existing, lawful delegations of tariff power that Congress has enacted or, if he finds those authorities insufficient, ask Congress for new authority. The President has usurped Congress's constitutional authority by impermissibly using the International Emergency Economic Powers Act ("IEEPA") to impose tariffs. Amici urge this Court to affirm the CIT's judgment that the President's tariffs, imposed under IEEPA, are unlawful.

INTRODUCTION

The Court of International Trade and the District Court for the District of Columbia reached the correct conclusion: President Trump’s imposition of tariffs under IEEPA is unlawful.

Only Congress has the power to “lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises,” U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 1, and to “regulate Commerce with foreign Nations,” id., cl. 3. This reflects the Framers’ interest in ensuring the most democratically accountable branch—the one closest to the People—be responsible for enacting taxes, duties, and tariffs. Federalist Papers Nos. 31–36.

The International Emergency Economic Powers Act (“IEEPA”), 50 U.S.C. §§ 1701–1710, provides the President with defined powers to address national emergencies, but does not confer the power to impose or remove tariffs.

Neither the word “duties” nor the word “tariffs” appear anywhere in IEEPA. Rather, IEEPA merely allows the President, in times of emergency, to “regulate ... importation or exportation” of property. 50 U.S.C. § 1702(a)(1)(B). A delegated power to “regulate” is not a power to impose tariffs.

IEEPA contains none of the hallmarks of legislation delegating tariff power to the executive such as limitations tied to specific products or countries, caps on the amount of tariff increases, procedural safeguards, public input, collaboration with Congress, or time limitations. In the five decades since IEEPA's enactment, no President from either party, aside from the current President, has ever claimed that IEEPA conferred any authority to impose tariffs.

Unmoored from the structural safeguards Congress built into actual tariff statutes, the President's unlawful "emergency" tariffs under IEEPA have led to chaos and uncertainty.

Amici respectfully submit that this Court should affirm the CIT's judgment and hold that IEEPA does not delegate tariff authority to the President and that the President's tariffs under IEEPA are therefore unlawful.

DISCUSSION

I. When Congress Delegates Its Constitutional Authority to Impose Tariffs, It Does So Explicitly and with Procedural Safeguards

A. It is undisputed that Congress, not the President, has the constitutional power to impose tariffs.

"The President's power, if any, ... must stem either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself.” Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585 (1952). Neither is present here.

Article I, Section 8 vests Congress—not the President—with the exclusive power to “lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises,” and to “regulate Commerce with foreign Nations.” The Administration does not argue to the contrary. Thus, absent a delegation of that authority, the President may not raise tariffs on imported goods. See id.; Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 585. IEEPA does not delegate tariff authority to the President.

B. When Congress delegates its tariff-raising authority, it does so explicitly and specifically.

When Congress authorizes duties, it says so. It uses the word “duty” to signal a delegation of its Article I power to “lay and collect ... Duties” and has done so from the moment it began delegating tariff authority.<sup>1</sup>

- Section 338 of the Tariff Act of 1930 refers to “new or additional duties.” 19 U.S.C. § 1338(a) (hereinafter “Section 338”).

- Section 232, which authorizes the President to “adjust imports,” 19 U.S.C. § 1862(c), explicitly refers to duties when discussing limits on presidential adjustments. Id. § 1862(a) (titled “Prohibition on Decrease or Elimination of Duties or Other Import Restrictions”).
- Section 122 of the Trade Act of 1974 empowers the President to proclaim “a temporary import surcharge ... in the form of duties.” 19 U.S.C. § 2132(a)(3)(A).
- Section 201 of that same Act authorizes the President to “proclaim an increase in, or the imposition of, any duty on the imported article” or to “proclaim a tariff-rate quota.” 19 U.S.C. § 2253(a)(3)(A)–(B).
- Section 301, also of the Trade Act of 1974, allows the President to “impose duties or other import restrictions.” 19 U.S.C. § 2411(c)(1)(B).

Unlike these statutes, IEEPA does not contain the term “duty” or “tariff” anywhere. See infra § II.A.

All of the express tariff statutes were enacted pursuant to a trade or tariff act:

- Section 338 is part of Chapter 4 of Title 19 of the U.S. Code. Chapter 4 is titled the “Tariff Act of 1930.” 19 U.S.C. § 1338.
- Section 232 is part of Chapter 7 of Title 19 of the U.S. Code. Chapter 7 is titled the “Trade Expansion Program.” 19 U.S.C. § 1862.
- Sections 122, 201, and 301 are all part of Chapter 12 of Title 19 of the U.S. Code. Chapter 12 is titled the “Trade Act of 1974.” 19 U.S.C. §§ 2132, 2251–2254, & 2411–2420.

By contrast, IEEPA is part of Title 50 (denominated “War and National Defense”) and is titled the “International Emergency Economic Powers Act.” It is not a “Tariff” or “Trade” act, nor was it codified as a tariff statute in Title 19 of the United States Code (denominated “Customs Duties”).

Further, because tariffs are levied on imports of specific products imported from specific countries, when Congress delegates tariff authority to the President, it also includes words that explicitly limit the delegation to products that have historically been subject to tariffs, often “articles” from a single country:

- Section 338 refers to duties “upon articles wholly or in part the ... product of ... any foreign country.” 19 U.S.C. § 1338(a).
- Section 201 limits the President’s tariff authority to a duty or a tariff-rate quota “on the imported article.” 19 U.S.C. § 2253(a)(3).
- Section 301 permits the duties or other import restrictions “on the goods of ... such foreign country.” 19 U.S.C. § 2411(c)(1)(B).

Only Section 122 permits temporary, broad-based tariffs on all imports from all countries, but Section 122 limits those tariffs to a maximum increase of 15% ad valorem and to a period of no more than 150 days. 19 U.S.C. § 2132(a)(3)(A); see Opinion at 33.

IEEPA, on the other hand, permits the regulation of the importation or exportation of “any property in which any foreign country or a national thereof has any interest ..., or with respect to any property subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.” 50 U.S.C. § 1702(a)(1)(B). As such, IEEPA extends to many forms of property that historically have never been subject to import tariffs, such as financial assets, real property, and intellectual property rights. Indeed, IEEPA has most commonly been applied to freezing financial assets or prohibiting certain financial transactions. See infra §§ III.A–B.

IEEPA bears none of the formal hallmarks of a tariff statute. It is not one.

C. When Congress delegates its tariff-raising authority, it imposes substantive limitations and procedural controls on the imposition of tariffs.

Whenever Congress has delegated its tariff authority, it has done so explicitly and subject to specific and articulated parameters and safeguards.

Prior to the 1930s, Congress did not typically delegate tariff power at all. Instead, it set tariff rates legislatively. And, in cases where Congress did delegate tariff authority to the President, it was generally to adjust legislatively established tariff rates within specified limits and after the President made specific factual determinations.

With the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of 1934, Pub. L. No. 73-316, 48 Stat. 943, Congress began delegating carefully limited tariff-setting authority to the President. Those delegations usually took the form of authorizing the President to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements and to proclaim limited tariff reductions, within bounds Congress prescribed.

In recent decades, Congress has enacted specific statutes that allow the President to adjust tariff rates in response to specific trade-related concerns or in response to required findings by U.S. agencies. These laws, however, include specific procedures, substantive standards, and temporal limits, starkly contrasting with IEEPA.

First, Congress establishes trade-specific prerequisites that must be met before the President is authorized to act. Section 338, for example, requires a finding “as a fact” that a foreign country imposes a non-reciprocal “charge, exaction, regulation, or limitation” on U.S. exports, or “discriminates in fact” against the commerce of the United States as compared to its treatment of imports from other countries. Section 338(a)(1)–(2). Section 232 requires a finding by the Secretary of Commerce that an article is being imported “in such quantities or under such circumstances as to threaten to impair the national security.” Section 232(b)(3)(A). Section 122 requires a determination of major international payments problems (“large and serious United States balance-of-payments deficits” or “an imminent and significant depreciation of the dollar”) requiring special import measures. Section 122(a)(1)–(2). A surge in imports that is significant enough to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic industry producing a comparable product is the prerequisite to action under Section 201. Action under Section 301 can be based on either a finding that U.S. rights under a trade agreement have been denied or that an act, policy, or practice of a foreign country is unreasonable or discriminatory and burdens or restricts U.S. commerce.

Second, Congress has historically set procedural safeguards before it hands over tariff authority to the President. Both Section 201 and previous Section 338 investigations have involved extensive processes conducted by the independent U.S. International Trade Commission, including (1) issuing questionnaires to collect extensive data, (2) public hearings in which all interested parties can submit written submissions and appear to provide testimony, (3) a formal vote by the Commission as to whether the prerequisites are met, and (4) a written report outlining the factual basis for the Commission’s determination.

Similarly, Section 301 requires (1) a formal investigation by the Office of the United States Trade Representative (USTR), sometimes begun by a petition from an industry group or union, (2) consultations with interested parties, (3) a public hearing, and (4) the publication in the Federal Register of the results of the investigation and the determination as to whether the statutory prerequisites to tariff action have been met. Section 301 investigations must be undertaken pursuant to regulations that Congress insisted USTR issue concerning the filing of petitions and the conduct of investigations and hearings.

These processes and requirements for factual findings demonstrate how Congress has set defined parameters on how the Executive Branch can use its delegated tariff authority. Congress also included detailed reporting requirements so it would be apprised of any tariff actions taken under these tariff-delegating statutes. None of these procedural safeguards are included in IEEPA.

Third, Congress maintains control over delegated tariff authority by imposing time limitations on the process governing the imposition of the tariffs, stating the length of time the tariffs can be in place, and prescribing how much notice importers must be given. Section 338, for example, requires a 30-day notice period between the time the tariffs are announced and when they are collected. (The President's IEEPA orders have generally become effective within 48 hours.) Section 122 permits duties to remain in place for no more than 150 days unless extended by Congress. Section 232 requires a Presidential determination of agreement (or not) with the Secretary of Commerce's report and findings within 90 days, with action implemented no less than 15 days later. Section 201 contains both procedural time limitations and restrictions on the length of time that the tariffs can remain in place: four years with the possibility of a single extension, resulting in a maximum of eight years.

Congress has also placed caps on how high tariff increases can go, as the amount of the tariff matters greatly. Section 122 limits the additional duties to 15% ad valorem. Similarly, Section 338 limits the additional tariffs to 50% ad valorem. Section 301(a)(3) specifies that any action taken be "in an amount that is equivalent in value to the burden or restriction being imposed by that country on United States Commerce."

As an emergency powers statute, not a tariff statute, IEEPA contains none of these carefully constructed limits. These “comprehensive statutory limitations would be eviscerated if the President could invoke a virtually unrestricted tariffing power under IEEPA.” Learning Res., Inc. v. Trump, No. CV 25-1248 (RC), 2025 WL 1525376, at *9 (D.D.C. May 29, 2025); see Opinion at 30–31 (“[T]his court does not read the words ‘regulate ... importation’ in IEEPA as authorizing the President to impose whatever tariff rates he deems desirable. Indeed, such a reading would create an unconstitutional delegation of power ... the words ‘regulate ... importation’ cannot grant the President unlimited tariff authority.”).

II. IEEPA Does Not Authorize the President to Impose Tariffs

In enacting IEEPA, Congress did not grant the President additional authority to impose or remove tariffs, as the court correctly held in Learning Res., Inc. v. Trump, No. CV 25-1248, 2025 WL 1525376 (D.D.C. May 29, 2025), appeal docketed, No. 25-5202 (D.C. Cir. May 30, 2025). IEEPA’s text and context foreclose it from delegating tariff authority.

A. The plain text of IEEPA does not provide the President with the power to impose tariffs.

IEEPA specifies the powers it grants the Executive. 50 U.S.C.

§ 1702. In relevant part, it authorizes the President to investigate, block during the pendency of an investigation, regulate, direct and compel, nullify, void, prevent or prohibit, any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, withdrawal, transportation, importation or exportation of, or dealing in, or exercising any right, power, or privilege with respect to, or transactions involving, any property in which any foreign country or a national thereof has any interest by any person, or with respect to any property, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States ....

Id. § 1702(a)(1)(B).

Despite the many powers clearly enumerated in the statute, nowhere does it contain the word “tariff,” “duty,” “excise,” or other similar words Congress has consistently used when delegating tariff powers to the President. See infra § II.B. This silence speaks volumes. See, e.g., Jama v. Immig. & Customs Enf’t, 543 U.S. 335, 341 (2005) (“We do not lightly assume that Congress has omitted from its adopted text requirements that it nonetheless intends to apply....”); Bittner v. United States, 598 U.S. 85, 94 (2023) (similar).

B. Congress has demonstrated it knows how to clearly and unmistakably authorize tariffs when it wants to—it did not do so in IEEPA.

As the CIT correctly recognized, Opinion at 27–28, there must be “clear congressional authorization” before a court will interpret a statute as conferring sweeping authority over areas of vast economic and political significance—the kind of authority the Administration claims here. West Virginia v. EPA, 597 U.S. 697, 723 (2022); see also Biden v. Nebraska, 600 U.S. 477, 501 (2023).<sup>2</sup> “It would be anomalous, to say the least, for Congress to have so painstakingly described the President’s limited authority on tariffs in other statutes, but to have given him, just by implication, nearly unlimited tariffing authority in IEEPA.” Learning Res., 2025 WL 1525376, at *9 (quoting Gonzales v. Oregon, 546 U.S. 243, 262 (2006)) (cleaned up).

Congress regularly meets this test when it delegates power to the President to raise or lower tariffs, clearly and explicitly granting the President that authority. See supra §§ I.B–C; 19 U.S.C. §§ 1338(a),

<sup>2</sup> The Administration suggests these principles do not apply if the President, rather than an executive agency, lays claim to an Article I power. Appellants’ Opening Brief, Fed Cir. Dkt. 61, at 43-44. Not so. The President has no tariff power unless Congress grants it. See Youngstown Sheet, 343 U.S. at 585. These principles thus apply to the President, as four circuits have held. See State v. Su, 121 F.4th 1, 14 (9th Cir. 2024); id. at 17–22 (Nelson, J. concurring); Louisiana v. Biden, 55 F.4th 1017, 1031 & n.40 (5th Cir. 2022); Georgia v. President of the United States, 46 F.4th 1283, 1295–97 (11th Cir. 2022); Kentucky v. Biden, 23 F.4th 585, 606–08 (6th Cir. 2022). The Administration cites only a vacated opinion, Mayes v. Biden, 67 F.4th 921, 933 (9th Cir. 2023), which is non-precedential and was rejected by the subsequent reasoning of Su.

1862(a), 2132(a)(3)(A), 2251(a)(3)(A), (B), 2411(c)(1)(B), 2492(a). In such cases, Congress refers to “duties,” “tariffs,” “articles,” “countries of origin,” and other clear statements of its intent to delegate tariff authorities. See 19 U.S.C. §§ 1338(a), 1862, 2132(a)(3)(A), 2253(a)(3), 2411(c)(1)(B). IEEPA contains no such references to specific imported articles or their country of origin. Rather, it permits specified actions, see 50 U.S.C. § 1702(a)(1)(B), to enable the President, during a foreign policy crisis, to freeze assets, block transactions, seize foreign property, or to impose embargoes. It does not provide for the imposition of tariffs.

Each of Congress’s express tariff delegations also require trade-specific prerequisites to be met before the President is authorized to impose tariffs. These limitations do not just signal when Congress intends to confer tariff power. Separation of power principles, including those embodied in the non-delegation doctrine, require such constraints for tariff power to be delegated at all, as the CIT correctly held.

Opinion at 27–28.

IEEPA, by contrast, contains no comparable “clear preconditions to Presidential action.” Fed. Energy Admin. v. Algonquin SNG, Inc., 426 U.S. 548, 559 (1976). IEEPA has a non-trade specific requirement:

the declaration of “any unusual and extraordinary threat, which has its source in whole or substantial part outside the United States, to the national security, foreign policy, or economy of the United States.” 50 U.S.C. § 1701(a) (emphasis added). Because of the wide variety of national emergencies that could fall within IEEPA’s ambit, IEEPA is not consistent with Congress’s practice of limiting the delegation of tariff authority solely to meet trade-related concerns and findings.

C. Congress has laid out an extensive statutory regime that authorizes the President to impose tariffs for discrete purposes, and IEEPA does not contain a residual tariff authority for other purposes.

Congress has laid out an extensive statutory regime that authorizes the President to impose tariffs for specific purposes. Interpreting IEEPA to confer an additional, effectively unbounded tariff authority would render that carefully constructed statutory regime meaningless.

This statutory regime for tariffs, which as described above includes Sections 122 and 301 of the Trade Act of 1974 and Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, stands in stark contrast to the statutory regime that governs declared emergencies where Presidents have previously lawfully invoked IEEPA powers since 1977. For example, Presidents have used IEEPA to impose financial sanctions in response to fast-breaking geopolitical developments that threaten U.S. national security and to quickly freeze the assets of foreign organizations that threaten U.S. national security. Without IEEPA, the President would lack authority to freeze assets, regulate banking transactions, and impose trade embargoes. By contrast, Congress has provided multiple statutory authorities for the President to impose, remove, or adjust tariffs, including on an urgent basis.

With Section 122 of the Trade Act of 1974, Congress recognized that tariffs might be needed on an urgent and temporary basis – and applied to all goods from all countries. Section 122 allows the President to take measures that may include a temporary tariff when necessary to address “large and serious United States balance-of-payments deficits” or certain other situations that present “fundamental international payments problems.” 19 U.S.C. § 2132. Section 122 tariffs are limited in duration to 150 days unless extended by Congress, are limited to 15% ad valorem, and are subject to other substantive limitations. Id.

If IEEPA were to authorize tariffs to remedy urgent balance of payment problems, it would effectively render Section 122 a nullity, violating the canon against rendering other statutes redundant.

RadLAX Gateway Hotel, LLC v. Amalgamated Bank, 566 U.S. 639, 645 (2012). As the CIT correctly recognized, Section 122 “removes the President’s power to impose remedies in response to balance-of-payments deficits, and specifically trade deficits, from the broader powers granted to a president during a national emergency under IEEPA by establishing an explicit non-emergency statute with greater limitations.” Opinion at 34.

And Congress, knowing it had already passed Section 122 in 1975, would not have casually or silently expanded tariff powers two years later in IEEPA without making that clear. See, e.g., Parker Drilling Mgmt. Servs., Ltd. v. Newton, 587 U.S. 601, 611 (2019) (Congress is presumed to legislate against the background of existing law).

Congress considered IEEPA against a backdrop in which it had already separately authorized multiple types of tariffs, including those at issue in United States v. Yoshida Int’l, Inc. 526 F.2d 560 (C.C.P.A. 1975), as well as tariffs designed to address threats to national security (in Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, 19 U.S.C. § 1862)—and chose to make those tariffs subject to limits in both scope and duration.<sup>3</sup>

Allowing the President to impose tariffs under IEEPA would effectively render all these other statutes surplusage, contrary to settled principles of statutory interpretation.

D. IEEPA’s power to “regulate” does not include the power to “tariff.”

The President contends that IEEPA’s grant of authority to “regulate ... importation or exportation” of any property, 50 U.S.C. § 1702(a)(1)(B), includes the power to “tariff.” But giving the President the power to “regulate” is not a clear delegation of the tariff power, and it is an implausible interpretation of the text. See Learning Res., 2025 WL 1525376, at *8 (holding that “[t]he Constitution treats the power to regulate and the power to impose tariffs separately because they are not substitutes[.]”).

In defense of this reading of “regulate,” the President has relied on case law holding Congress may impose tariffs pursuant to Congress’s Commerce Clause authority in addition to Congress’s powers. But the fact that Congress may use its Commerce Clause power to impose tariffs is entirely separate from the question of whether Congress delegated that tariff authority to the President; any such delegation must be clear and unequivocal, not cryptic or tacit. See West Virginia, 597 U.S. at 723; Biden, 600 U.S. at 501. And even when Congress does use its power to “regulate” commerce, the power to “regulate” and the power to impose tariffs do not necessarily go hand in hand. See Nat’l. Fed’n. of Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius, 567 U.S. 519, 561–63 (2012) (the Affordable Care Act’s individual mandate was a permissible exercise of Congress’s taxation power, even if it could not be sustained under its discrete commerce power).

Further, reading “regulate” to implicitly include the power to impose tariffs would produce absurd results. Congress routinely grants regulatory power without any intention of conferring authority to impose tariffs. See, e.g., Securities Exchange Act of 1934, § 4(a), 15 U.S.C. § 78(d) (SEC’s power to regulate); Communications Act of 1934, § 303, 47 U.S.C. § 303(e) (FCC’s power to regulate). These are not grants of authority to impose or remove tariffs, and the presumption of consistent usage requires treating the term in IEEPA the same way. See, e.g., United States v. Penn, 63 F.4th 1305, 1313 (11th Cir. 2023) (courts “read terms consistently across multiple statutes on the same subject”; “a legislative body generally uses a particular word with a consistent meaning in a given context”) (cleaned up) (citing, inter alia, Erlenbaugh v. United States, 409 U.S. 239, 243–44 (1972))).

E. Past governmental use of IEEPA’s power to “regulate” imports is consistent with the plain language reading of “regulate”—while “tariff” is not.

The extensive past use of IEEPA’s power to regulate imports—without imposing tariffs on them—illustrates what Congress intended when it passed IEEPA: the authority to impose reasonable restrictions and licensing requirements on imports, not an unbounded power to assess tariffs. For example, the U.S. Treasury Department’s Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) has an extensive practice of issuing “specific licenses” to companies to engage in transactions that would otherwise be prohibited by sanctions, including to import goods that would otherwise be prohibited by IEEPA trade embargoes. Similarly, OFAC has long used IEEPA’s power to regulate imports to authorize specific classes of individuals to import specific classes of goods, such as allowing a U.S. oil company to import oil from Venezuela subject to conditions, despite a general ban on importing Venezuelan oil, see

OFAC Venezuela General License 41 (later rescinded),

<https://ofac.treasury.gov/media/929531/download?inline>. Further,

IEEPA has been used to restrict exports of goods. See, e.g., Executive Order No. 14068, Sec. 1(a)(ii) (in response to Russia’s invasion of Ukraine, prohibiting “the exportation, reexportation, sale, or supply, directly or indirectly, from the United States, or by a United States person, wherever located, of luxury goods,” to Russia).

Each of these applications of IEEPA sanctions powers has also been applied to either specific countries or to specific categories of non-state actors, such as terrorists or cyber hacking groups, consistent with IEEPA’s requirement that the President report to the Congress not only the circumstances that necessitate emergency action but also which foreign countries the action applies to and why such actions are to be taken with respect to those particular countries. 50 U.S.C. § 1703(b)(5). Using IEEPA to impose across-the-board tariffs on imports from all countries flies in the face of the Congressional mandate to justify emergency action on a case-specific basis.

F. The term “regulate” in IEEPA cannot include the power to impose tariffs because it would put IEEPA in conflict with the constitutional prohibition on export taxes.

The President’s novel and expansive interpretation of “regulate” would also render IEEPA unconstitutional. IEEPA confers a power to “regulate” both imports and exports. 50 U.S.C. § 1702(a)(1)(B). Thus in the President’s reading, IEEPA must authorize “tariffs” on exports. Id. But the Constitution expressly forbids export tariffs. U.S. Const. Art. I, § 9, cl. 5 (“No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.”). If “regulate imports” were construed to include imposing tariffs, consistency would require reading “regulate exports” the same way. This latter scenario would plainly run afoul of the Constitution. See id.; A.G. Spalding & Bros. v. Edwards, 262 U.S. 66 (1923) (taxing exports is “forbidden ... by the Constitution.”). The Court must avoid an interpretation of the statute that is both implausible and unconstitutional. See Sebelius, 567 U.S. at 537–38, 574 (courts must construe a statute to save it from unconstitutionality whenever possible); accord, e.g., Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575 (1988).

G. The President is not entitled to deference when he misuses IEEPA.

Whatever deference courts afford the President in certain foreign affairs, the President is not entitled to deference when he misuses IEEPA. Statutory interpretation falls squarely within the traditional role of the judicial branch, and courts have not accorded the President deference when he misuses IEEPA.

Last year, the Fifth Circuit, applying Loper Bright v. Raimondo, 603 U.S. 369 (2024), rejected the Treasury Department’s contention that the definition of “property” in the same provision of IEEPA at issue in this case, 50 U.S.C. § 1702, encompassed cryptocurrency “smart contracts” and noted that courts “discharge [their] duty by independently interpreting the statute and effectuating the will of Congress subject to constitutional limits.” Van Loon v. Dep’t of the Treasury, 122 F.4th 549 at 563 (5th Cir. 2024) (quoting Loper Bright, 603 U.S. at 395) (cleaned up).

In 2020, two federal district courts enjoined the President from using IEEPA to ban distribution of Chinese-owned social media app TikTok, ruling that the ban on TikTok likely exceeded the President’s authority under the statute—giving the President no deference despite IEEPA’s emergency powers. TikTok Inc. v. Trump, 507 F. Supp. 3d 92 (D.D.C. 2020); Marland v. Trump, 498 F. Supp. 3d 624 (E.D. Pa. 2020). Here, too, “because IEEPA does not authorize the President to impose tariffs, the tariffs that derive from the Challenged Orders are ultra vires.” Learning Res., 2025 WL 1525376, at *13 (emphasis in original).

III. IEEPA’s Legislative History and Historical Practice Confirm It Does Not Delegate Congress’s Tariff Power

Beyond IEEPA’s text, two additional considerations demonstrate IEEPA is not a delegation of the tariff power. First, the legislative history of IEEPA shows it was intended to limit the President’s emergency powers and confine them to exercises of power that did not include tariffs. Second, IEEPA is almost fifty years old, yet in that entire span, no President had ever asserted that it gave the Executive the right to impose tariffs—until now.

A. IEEPA’s legislative history confirms it was not intended to delegate tariff authority to the President.

Notably, Congress enacted IEEPA in 1977 as part of a package of reforms designed to curb the President’s use of emergency powers. Pub. L. No. 95-223, Title II § 203, 91 Stat. 1626 (1977); Patrick A. Thronson, Toward Comprehensive Reform of America’s Emergency Law

Regime, 46 U. Mich. J. L. Reform 737 (2013). Congress wanted to limit the expansive powers that Presidents had claimed under Section 5(b) of the Trading with the Enemy Act of 1917 (TWEA).

In Congress’s view, the purpose of IEEPA was to “redefine the power of the President to regulate international economic transactions in future times of war or national emergency... [IEEPA] would separate war and non-war authorities and procedures, preserving existing Presidential powers in time of war declared by Congress, and providing somewhat narrower powers subject to congressional review in times of ‘national emergency’ short of war.” H. R. Rep. No. 95-459 at 1 (1977).

Congress structured IEEPA to strike a careful balance: providing the President with a flexible and limited tool to address certain national emergencies and limiting those powers with stricter oversight. Id. at 10. IEEPA included additional procedural limitations related to the assertion of an emergency: to invoke IEEPA, Presidents must declare a national emergency. To sustain IEEPA actions for more than a year, a President must submit an annual declaration extending the emergency. 50 U.S.C. §§ 1662(d) and 1701. Congress also gave itself the power to overturn IEEPA actions with a privileged concurrent resolution terminating the underlying emergency.<sup>4</sup>

Nothing in the House and Senate reports support the position that IEEPA includes a tariff power. Instead, the reports describe IEEPA's powers as including the power to regulate foreign exchange and banking transactions and to regulate or freeze property in which foreign nationals have an interest. See S. Rep. No. 95-466 at 4,543 (1977); H. Rep. No. 95-459 at 15 (1977). Notably absent from these descriptions is the word "tariff."

B. The President's use of IEEPA to impose tariffs is unprecedented.

Presidents invoked IEEPA sixty-nine times between Congress passing the statute and early 2024.<sup>5</sup> During that time, Presidents used IEEPA to respond to a diverse range of emergencies ranging from the 1979 Iranian hostage crisis, see Exec. Order No. 12170, 44 Fed. Reg.

<sup>4</sup> Legislative vetoes were held unconstitutional in INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983), but Congress has retained privileged joint resolutions as a mechanism to overturn international emergencies.

Yet between 1977 and 2025, not once did a President use IEEPA to impose tariffs. The total absence of tariffs for nearly fifty years reinforces the conclusion that the statute was not understood to authorize such measures. See Biden, 600 U.S. at 501 (“[The President’s proffered interpretation] is inconsistent with the statutory language and past practice under the statute.”).

IV. Allowing the President to Impose Tariffs Under IEEPA Would Allow the Executive to Usurp Trade Power

Power over “Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises” and “Commerce with foreign nations” are core Congressional prerogatives. “The question here is not whether something should be done; it is who has the authority to do it”—and how. Biden, 600 U.S. at 501.

Since the country’s founding, Congress has exercised its constitutional responsibility over trade. The very first U.S. Congress enacted the Tariff Act of 1789 within its first months of existence, which George Washington signed into law on July 4, 1789. In the more than two centuries since, Congress has enacted thousands of pages of statutes related to U.S. trade and tariffs. And Congress has continued to carry out its constitutional responsibility for tariffs and trade in recent decades. In 1994 Congress made the decision to approve the Uruguay Round Agreements, which established the World Trade Organization, authorized the United States' participation in it, and set tariff rates. Pub. L. No. 103-465. Since the 1980s, Congress has authorized the President to negotiate, and has subsequently approved, fourteen Trade Agreements with trading partners. These include the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement that President Trump negotiated, and which Congress enacted in 2020. Pub. L. No. 116-113. Congress has also enacted a series of tariff preference programs to promote trade and economic development.<sup>6</sup>

The President's sweeping tariffs, imposed in the absence of any grant of authority from Congress, threaten to undermine the trade policies and programs that Congress has pursued through these and other laws. These unlawful tariffs do not merely modify the statutory tariffs Congress has promulgated and approved—except perhaps “in the same sense that the French Revolution modified the status of the French nobility—it has abolished them and supplanted them with a new regime entirely”—and have done so in the absence of any statutory delegation of power by Congress. Biden, 600 U.S. at 496 (cleaned up).

Today, the President claims an authority to fundamentally upend Congress’s longstanding and constitutional power over trade based on no more than the inclusion of the phrase “regulate ... importation or exportation” of any property in a 1977 emergency powers statute. 50 U.S.C. § 1702. He has relied on this inapposite language to impose the largest U.S. tariff increases since the 1930s. What’s more, these tariffs, imposed without any statutory authority, are at odds with legislation passed by Congress implementing trade agreements and policies. The power the President claims—to raise or lower tariffs unbounded by any limits on geography, rates, or the types of products covered—far exceeds any authority that Congress has ever granted the President in a trade statute. Congress does not “hide elephants” (broad tariff authority) “in mouseholes” (a strained and unconstitutional interpretation of the term “regulate”). Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass’n, 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001).

When Congress has acted, it has established stable trade and tariff regimes carefully, deliberately, and transparently, ensuring accountability to the democratic process. In stark contrast, the President's tariffs under IEEPA are mercurial, sudden, and uncertain. It is unclear when they may start, when they may increase or decrease, how much they may increase or decrease, and when they may end.

This is dysregulation, not delegation. The President's actions are not consistent with the lawful power Congress granted in IEEPA in 1977 nor America's constitutional structure. If the President believes that imposing, removing, or amending tariffs are an appropriate policy measure, Congress has given him tools to pursue those goals.<sup>7</sup> But IEEPA is not one of them.

CONCLUSION

This Court should affirm the CIT's judgment and hold that IEEPA does not authorize tariffs.

<sup>7</sup> To be clear, Amici take no position here as to whether any of the other statutes discussed herein would permit the tariffs at issue. That is a question for another day. The issue before this Court is the President's invocation of IEEPA to impose tariffs, which is unlawful.

Respectfully submitted,
